The customary Wednesday Fine Art number was given by Miss Duncan, whose interpretation of the beautiful poem, "My Tree of Life," was received with great enthusiasm and she responded with Eugene Field's "Dutch Lullaby," as an encore. If you have never heard Miss Duncan read the "Dutch Lullaby" in that quaint manner of her's, then you don't know what you've missed! She has the wonderful charm of human life, and we heartily agree with the young lady member of the Rotary Club who said that Miss Duncan was one of the best interpreters Fort Worth has ever had.

My poetry got a sad blow the other day. The cruel wind came and blew it away. I'm speaking of our "arbor, our arbor, our vinecovered arbor that ran between be tween Jarvis and Main Bldg." (Did you just hear the melody of that? Right out of my own head, too, Ethyle, my own.) Yes, it was like Esau -"and it was not, for God took it." It happened all in the dreary night time, the wind moaned, and crushed to earth our precious arbor. Now, they are cutting it away. It fell most badly on the north end, and just to be passing along the road, it looks like a corpse of a Ickthoysaur that had a broken back. It was the prettiest thing we had, Ethyle, it's such a pity it couldn't have been one of the buildings we don't use so much. And the heart-blood bringing part of it all is that never no more again shall we have an arbor, an arbor, an vine-covered arbor, unless some kind person, some dear kind person, Ethyle, should chance to take pity on our misfortune and help us a little. Oh, Ethyle, my love, there is no more arbor to walk slowly and more slowly under when the moon shines brightly down with your lover, on his arm. No more shall we pluck a fragrant, nectarfilled, dew kissed cluster of delicate honeysuckle blossom as we flee to and fro our classes. No more shall the bitter, biting north wind be kept from us by it's loving branches (I'm meaning the honeysuckle, Ethyle) unless some dear kind person wlil help us a bit, will lend us a hand in the time of our bereavement. Ah, woe is us, all of usalas, eheu. 'Tis more than I can bear. I am playing tennis now, my
