Professor found dead

Graveside services were held Dec. 29 for TCU Geology professor Charles L. Rowett Jr., 47, who was found shot to death Dec. 27 at his home at 3775 Cornish Drive. A rifle was found near his body.

Tarrant County Medical Examiner Dr. Felix Gwozdz ruled the death a suicide.

Rowett, who had been on the geology faculty since 1970, was on sabbatical at the time of his death. He was scheduled to teach classes this spring. He was also to lead a geology department camping trip

Jan. 4.

He had done considerable research on biostratigraphy and paleontology, especially fossil corals, of Alaska.

Surviving are his wife, Della; a son, Charles L. Rowett III; two daughters, Mrs. Catherine Ledbetter and Mrs. Gail Kaether, all of Fort Worth; his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Rowett Sr. of Arlington; a brother, Marving Rowett of Dallas; and four grandchildren.

Carter reportedly invites Nixon to state dinner for China's Teng

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter has invited former President Richard M. Nixon to a state dinner at the White House honoring China's Teng Hsiao-ping later this month, sources said Monday.

Other sources, who asked not to be identified, said that Nixon has accepted the invitation.

The dinner is scheduled Jan. 29, the day the Chinese vice premier arrives in Washington for a week's visit.

Nixon has been in Washington only twice since he resigned as president Aug. 9, 1974 and neither of those visits has included a return to the White House.

The White House refused to confirm or deny the report. At the former president's home in San Clemente, Calif., a source said any such announcement would have to come from the White House.

Nixon visited China in February 1972, breaking a long-standing chill between the two nations. He always regarded the China thaw as one of his greatest foreign policy achievements.

The Nixon visit resulted in the exchange of missions between the United States and the Peoples Republic of China, culminating in the resumption of diplomatic relations under Carter on Jan. 1.

Teng Hsiao-ping is scheduled to arrive in Washington on Jan. 29.

Exotic toy shop stocks unusual for the wealthy

By Pamela G. Hollie

BEVERLY HILLS+ There is a saying that anyone can make money here if what they sell is unusual and expensive and they sell it to the people on the "A" list—those who can afford to place style, comfort and pleasure before cost.

For these people and others like them, Fred Bernstein and Terry Quin have created the Toy Store, an adult version of F.A.O. Schwarz with price tags of up to $200,000.

"This is the only place in the world that this could work," said Quinn, 31 years-old, who with his childhood friend turned a street corner where an American Motors dealership failed into an exotic mecca for the adventurous and the wealthy.

Among the exotic items is a 40-foot customized powerboat with Rolls-Royce interior and a Ferrari deck for a mere $100,000 and a 1976 Rolls-Royce Camargue car in jazy blue for $100,000. The cheapest items for sale are a couple of rare South American macaws, Rolls-Royce and Ferrari jewelry and 60 Toy Store banners.

The two owners expect the Toy Store to gross at least $1 million a month and with Christmas, to liquidate their entire inventory of $6 million.

To keep the inventory full of exotic items, the store has an international network of 50 buyers—scouts, some of whom are authorized to spend more than $100,000 for items.

The Toy Store was entirely financed. "No bank would back such an idea; we didn't even approach any," said Bernstein, who owns a bank, the Harrison Deposit Bank and Trust Company, in Cynthiana, Ky. "And we did not use any bank either. We wouldn't try after the mess with Lance," he

Advance registration debugged

By Bill Palmer

With half the students this semester already enrolled, registration was smoother than usual for many students and staff last week.

It was a "breeze" this time, according to Jane Bingham, a graduate student at Brite. After completing most of the registration procedure at Brite she had only to pay the cashier Thursday during registration.

But according to one of those working at Thursday's registration, not enough of the right instructions were given to the right people, and those working at registration weren't told enough.

"It's a madhouse," the woman, who asked that her name be withheld, said.

Carol Patton, director of Freshman Advising, said registration this semester went smoothly, especially with continuing education students.

Patton said that some faculty members wore badges encouraging students to ask for help. There were so many good comments regarding these badges, she said, that she is sure they made a difference.

Advance registration, according to Patton, seems to work. Most people, she said, have positive attitudes and very few complaints about it. And problems detected during TCU's first advance registration have been worked out.

"We debugged the program," she said, "and it worked very well."

According to Calvin Cumbie, registrar, 3,322 students advance-registered for the spring 1979 semester. That amounts to 57 percent of the 5,874 students enrolled last fall. Of those who advance-registered, 1,311 were men, and 2,011 were women.

The sophomore class had the highest percentage (81 percent) of advance-registering students among classes, while Harris College of Nursing had the highest rate (85 percent) among the separate schools. The junior class (76 percent) and evening school (10 percent) had the lowest rates of advance-registering.

Although actual figures will not be available for some time, Cumbie estimates that fewer advance-registered students will make schedule changes since the "time lag," or the period between advance registration and the first classes, is shorter.

Advance registration for this spring semester was two months ago, as compared to five months between advance registration and classes for the fall semester.

Cumbie said that registration was smooth and that many more students could have been handled.

Abe Martin was 'homespun' coach

By Matt Keith
Sports Editor

They called him "Honest Abe," "Folksy Abe," and "The Jacksboro Philosopher." But for more years than most of us can remember, they also called him "Coach."

The coach, Othol "Abe" Martin, died last Thursday at age 70.

Spending most of his life at TCU as either a player, coach, or athletic director, Martin led the Horned Frogs to three Southwest Conference Championships and five bowl games. During his 14-years as head coach, Martin's squads were ranked in the nations top 10 teams three times.

Coach Martin left his mark on scores of athletes through the years, including 27 All-Southwest Conference choices and seven All-Americans. Among the more outstanding of these were halfback Jim Swink and former Dallas Cowboy Bob Lilly.

Martin made an impression on his peers as well as his players. He was voted Texas Coach of the Year in 1955 and 1958. He served a term as president of the American Football Coaches Association in 1965 and in 1968 was awarded that organization's Amos Alonzo Stagg Award for a lifetime of service to football.

Bad weather policy developed by Wilsey

A new bad weather policy will provide TCU students and personnel with an official telephone announcement concerning weather-related decisions this semester.

The policy, developed by Executive Vice-Chancellor H. Lawrence Wilsey, states that the University intends to remain open despite adverse weather.

However, if conditions become so severe that classes must be cancelled and offices closed, every effort will be made to notify students, faculty and staff through the news media.

Also, a special telephone number—921-7111—may be called 24 hours a day. It will provide an official taped announcement about decisions pertaining to bad weather.

Any decision to cancel classes and close offices will be made through Wilsey's office by 6 a.m. for day classes and offices and 3 p.m. for evening and special courses, according to the new policy.

Jim Lehman, director of Public Relations, will be responsible for relaying the information to campus police, who will tape the message.

The news media will be notified only if classes are cancelled and offices closed, the policy says.

Vice Chancellors will notify deans and unit heads, who will contact department chairmen, supervisors, and others as necessary.

Lehman said the new service will enable those concerned to get official information accurately and quickly, and will reduce the possibility of error.

If TCU remains open while schools in the Fort Worth Independent School District are closed, the policy continues, only students living on-campus will have to attend classes. Commuting students will be given reasonable opportunities to make up work missed.

Faculty who cannot get to class or arrange for a substitute should notify the department office of their plans to reschedule classes or make up work missed.

University staff, except those on emergency crews, are required to notify their supervisors arrange to make up work missed, or charge the absence to vacation time, the policy adds.

Even if classes are cancelled, the residence halls, cafeterias, health center, library, Rickel Building, computer center and campus police will remain open with a limited staff. Emergency crews will be on duty to keep essential facilities and equipment operating.

If TCU is requested to cut down its energy use, the residence halls, health center and cafeterias will be serviced even though administrative and instructional facilities may be closed, the policy continues.

TCU civic, social and cultural events will be cancelled whenever classes or registration have been cancelled and university offices have been closed. Efforts will be made to reschedule the events whenever possible, the policy says.

Religion professor Jim Rurak moves one of many bags of paper collected by ECO, a conservation group at TCU.

Conservation group helps by recycling

By Bill Reyner

From a donation of $11 and a lot of concern, the Environmental Conservation Organization first started cleaning up TCU. Its purpose—to recycle paper and beverage cans while raising money for environmental programs.

Now, $900 and 45 tons of paper later, ECO has helped support various hunger programs and conservation groups in its two years, according to Stuart Guinn, president of the organization.

Profits made from the recycled cans and paper are used for two causes:

The hunger relief committee investigates worldwide programs to find the most effective ways to prevent world hunger. They also plan ways to promote public awareness of the hunger problem.

Other committees help promote and develop environmental conservation of any kind. The committees allocate their share of profits to programs on campus and nationwide.

Last spring, for example, ECO promoted Hunger Week at TCU. This included a vegetarian dinner, workshops and speakers to help gain insight into the hunger situation in the world. ECO was also responsible for Sun Day and Energy Week, other programs concerning the conservation of energy.

The work accomplished has been the result of the efforts of the 15 to 20 members of the organization. TCU has supported the program by allowing a shack to be built on the coliseum grounds and a van to be used for transporting the paper.

Those who give their time to this cause have to be dedicated in their beliefs, because otherwise "there is little personal reward," said Guinn.

Recycling was at one time run by the city of Fort Worth, and ECO concentrated only on collecting on campus. But when Fort Worth dropped its program for economical reasons last November, ECO took over.

In November the price of paper dropped to a half-cent a pound, down from 2 cents a pound before.

This is a very low price, Guinn conceded, but with the volume of paper that is collected, the group earns about $20 every week recycling newspaper.

The average paper intake is 5-6,000 pounds every week, said Guinn. He also estimates there are approximately 150-200 people in the Fort Worth area who participate in bringing paper on a regular basis.

Arts of area to be chronicled

With the New Year and the new staff at the Daily Skiff, I'll be giving you a new rundown on what's going on around town. For those of you who are wondering what there is to do in Fort Worth and the metroplex and haven't had someone to show you, I'll be your guide.

For starters, all you need to do is walk to the Student Center and find the Art Gallery—there's a lineup of spring exhibitions and Brown Bag Series there. Brown Bags are a series of lectures, demonstrations and performances which are free and open to the public.

All Events begin at noon, and you can bring your own lunch or, if you prefer, brown bag lunches will be available. The first Brown Bag will be Monday, Jan. 22. Dr. Lorraine Sherley, Emeritus Professor of English, will be discussing the Pompeii Exhibit, currently at the Dallas Museum of Fine Art.

The Student Center Gallery is presenting the Fifth Annual University of Dallas National Print Invitational. This exhibition represents a cross-section of the best contemporary printmakers, and will be open through Jan. 22.

There are basically three techniques in printmaking: serigraphy or silkscreening, lithography, and Intaglio Etching. The better the layman understands the techniques, the more qualified he is to appreciate the work of art.

The serigraph is the most uncomplicated way of printmaking—the artist prepares a tightly-stretched screen, usually of silk, and blocks out areas not to be printed by filling up the mesh of the screen with a varnish-like substance.

Paper is then placed under the screen, and ink is forced through the still-open mesh onto the paper.

The lithograph is a method by which the artist draws directly on a flat stone or specially prepared metal plate. The stone is dampened with water, then inked. The ink clings to the greasy crayon marks, but not to the dampened areas.

When a piece of paper is pressed against the stone, the ink on the greasy parts is transferred to it.

Intaglio Etching is a technique using a metal plate which is coated by a material which resists acid, called the ground.

The artist draws his design on the ground with a sharp needle, which removes the ground where he touches it. When the plate is put in an acid bath, these exposed parts will be etched. This produces the sunken line which will receive the ink.

In printing, the ink settles in the sunken areas and the plate is wiped clean. The plate in contact with the damp paper is passed through a roller press and the paper is forced into a sunken area to receive the ink.

The artist etches on the plate the parts which will appear in the finished print as black or colored areas. White areas are left untouched. Depth of tone is controlled by depth of etch.

This explanation will enable you to understand what you are seeing at the show, and will make the experience a more valuable one. The prints are for sale and prices will be posted. It's a beautiful show and for the price of a quarter you can take home a brochure.

added, referring to the banking difficulties of Bert Lance, the former head of the Office of Management and Budget.

Bernstein and Quinn were boyhood friends in Cincinnati, where Bernstein's father ran an accounting concern and Quinn's father was a design engineer for the General Motors Corporation. Both graduates of the University of Cincinnati, the two first went into business together in 1975 with a company in Cincinnati called Hollywood Motor Cars, which described the style if not the place.

Until two years ago, when they came west, the two were primarily wholesalers of exotic cars. "We were doing all the work and selling very little compared to the retail price of the cars," said Bernstein, who with Quinn established in California in 1976 a new Hollywood Motor Cars, a wholesale dealership of Rolls-Royces, Ferraris and other exotic cars.

The two also started a company called Trans World Leasing; another, Trans Ocean Airways, which specializes in leasing business jets, and a Ferrari dealership in Monterey. "The Toy Store is a combination of all our talents," Bernstein said.

New Cambodian government claims changes

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Fighting was reported in many parts of Cambodia today but the new government claimed normal life is being restored after three years of oppression.

Senior Thai intelligence sources said Vietnamese forces were engaged in heavy fighting near Sisophon, 30 miles east of the Thai border. Clashes also were reported at Nimit, about 13 miles from the frontier.

Thai and Western sources said they had reports of clashes in many other parts of the country between troops still loyal to the ousted government of Premier Pol Pot and the Vietnamese and Communist Cambodian rebel forces which drove the other Communist government from PHNOM Penh eight days ago.

These sources said loyalist troops bypassed in the two-week Vietnamese blitz apparently were striking back. But there were no reports of any serious reverses suffered by the Vietnamese and their Cambodian proteges.

Thai sources said Battambang, in northwest Cambodia and the old government's last major city, had fallen to the invaders, but fighting continued in the area. Fighting also was reported around Kompong Som, the nation's only deep-water port which the provisional government proclaimed by the rebel Kampuchea (Cambodia) United Front said it had taken.

There were reports officials and troops of the former government were taking refuge in the Cardamom and Elephant mountains of southwest Cambodia and on the island of Kong, in the Gulf of Thailand, preparing to carry on a guerrilla campaign.

Western sources said the island would provide a natural supply link to guerrillas in the mountains if China carried out its promise to back the holdouts.

The pro-Hanoi government in Phnom Penh continued to report public rejoicing over the ouster of the Pol Pot government and a return toward life as it was before that regime forced much of the population into communal farms and caused the deaths of an estimated million persons by execution, starvation and disease.

A large number of Cambodians, perhaps as many as 100,000, fled to Vietnam in the past three years, and Hanoi said many of them want to return. About 15,000 Cambodians are in Thai refugee camps along the border, but some of them told reporters they would wait and see what happens before deciding whether to go home.

Martin emphasized education, sportsmanship, and worthiness

from 1955 through 1959, Martin's record included 37 wins, 12 losses and a tie for a 74-percent victory rate.

For the remainder of his coaching years, Martin's teams were relatively slack in the win-loss columns, but there were still memorable times. In the 1961 season TCU won only two conference games, but one of those was a shutout of nationally ranked Texas 6-0. Martin coached the Frogs' most recent bowl team in 1965 when his squad swept the final half of their conference slate to tie for second place and travel to the Sun Bowl.

Then in 1966, with three games remaining in the season, Martin suffered a heart attack only hours before the Texas game. This kept him off the sidelines for the remainder of the season, and forced him to give up the double duties as head coach and athletic director (a post that he had held since Meyer's retirement in 1963). For the next nine years, Martin served as full-time athletic director.

Buster Brannon, former TCU basketball coach and longtime friend of Martin, said, "It hurt Abe a lot more than most folks realize to have to give up coaching. It was his whole life. He put his 'kids' ahead of everything else."

Even in the later years after Martin's retirement in 1975 he couldn't seem to take his mind off of TCU. According to TCU Athletic Director Frank Windegger he often came to the campus in the afternoons; where he would walk around the inside of the coliseum to exercise. Occasionally, he would stop in the athletic office to have a cup of coffee and talk with Windegger, who was one of his first recruits at TCU. Always interested in the program, Martin remained a dedicated follower of TCU sports through his retirement years.

In his years at TCU, Abe Martin was more than a record book coach, he was a devoted teacher as well. He saw football as only a game, but an important game in which one could learn rules for life as well as off-tackle slants. He felt that his practice field was just as valid a classroom as any in Reed Hall. Indeed the lessons that he taught each day were just as important.

Martin stressed education and discipline. He taught his players sportsmanship and integrity, demanding honesty. He put his trust in his players and assistants and expected them to be worthy of that faith. Another important lesson that Martin's players learned was how to accept victory and defeat as he accepted them, with never ending class. He was always ready to give credit where it was deserved, either to the opponent who had defeated him, or to the players and coaches who had helped him win.

Not only did he believe that he could teach his athletes, he also learned from them. When he was inducted into the Texas Sports Hall of Fame, he accepted the honor by saying that each boy he coached had left him something good.

Martin took more than the usual amount of interest in his players. To many of them he was a father figure and he kept that status even after they graduated. He made it a point to keep track of his former athletes. He enjoyed sharing with them the victories and defeats of life just as he had shared them on the gridiron.

With his team Martin was always low pressure and personal. Part of his great success was the way that he made people feel welcome and comfortable. His first All-American, Jim Swink said it simply, "He made football fun for us."

It was this sense of welcome and the fact that Martin was basically country himself that brought the country boys to TCU in droves to play for Martin. According to Brannon, "Those boys like Lilly and Swink came to TCU because they wanted to play for Abe." They wanted to learn from him and be like him.

Martin's 1961 team that beat Texas consisted almost entirely of small town talent. Even the captains that year hailed from such booming metropolises as Pine Tree, Seymour and New London.

Martin was simple, but sincere and dedicated. He fought for his athletes even when it put him in conflict with the administration or the student body. He stood up for his personal values and instilled these in his "boys" even in the troubled sixties.

In the later years he even had to fight for his style of coaching. He believed in working with his players on a very personal level, teaching them the fundamentals and developing each man's talents. He watched as his method of coaching with personal caring, homespun philosophies, and a chalkboard on the sidelines became outdated by computers, mass scholarships, and coaches who were no more than distant generals directing their troops from on high.

Windegger hailed Martin as one of the great one platoon football coaches. He said, "Abe was so good at it because he could feel the pulse of the whole team. Now things are so specialized that the assistants have to do much of the actual coaching."

More than a coach, Windegger remembers Abe Martin as a "great humanitarian." He said, "There are so many things you could say about Abe. A lot of adjectives could be applied to him, but above all, he cared about people."

Abe Martin cared about people, and people also cared about him. And those fortunate enough to have known Abe still do.

During one of his many games as TCU head coach, Abe Martin surveys the action on the field. In his 14 years as head coach, he led the Frogs to three SWC championships and five bowl games.

Cagers struggling, but they're improving

By Bob Hale

With a lineup featuring seven freshmen, the TCU cagers are presently 5-8 on the season and 0-3 in the conference. Amazing statistics they are not, but one must take into consideration that this time a year ago, the Frogs had lost 10 of 12 regular season games and were 0-3 in the conference.

"We're a few games ahead, but probably 3,000 percent improved over last year," Somerville said yesterday. "We haven't played as well as we could play, but we're making some progress," he added.

The Frogs have lost three consecutive conference games, the first to the overpowering Texas Longhorns in Austin on Jan. 4. If the score at halftime (53-24) was any indication of the coming holocaust, Somerville must have known it would be a long bus ride home. The Horns continued to dominate the match with Senior guard Jim Krivacs scoring 29 points. When the dust had settled, the scoreboard read in favor of Texas, 92-63.

The Frogs were at home Jan. 8 for the second conference downfall at the hands of Texas Tech, 99-75, then on to Houston last Saturday for a game that was regionally broadcast by NBC-TV.

The trip to Houston's Hofheinz Pavilion provided a bit of deja vu for the Frogs. It was all too familiar. They had seen it all before. Houston's run-and-gun offense capitalized on 83 percent of its field goal attempts and went to the dressing room 14 points ahead. The Cougars scored another 57 points in the second half to command a 95-66 win.

Somerville admits that his young team has its problems.

"You don't look good when you only shoot 30 percent, and that's all we shot against Houston. We've got a lot of young kids and there is only three years total experience playing major college basketball on our team now. We're limited in so many areas."

Somerville, however, does see a light at the end of the tunnel.

"We're so much improved over last season it's unbelievable. Sure, it's tough when you're playing some of the best teams in the country with kids fresh out of high school, but in order for us to beat some of the teams we're playing, our boys would have to play perfect basketball, our execution would have to be perfect," Somerville said.

Somerville says that his team's handling of the ball has been improving, particularly with his guards.

"We have some guards that are promising right now, but we need to improve our play above the rim. Our young players will grow as a team and eventually be serious conference contenders."

In regard to recruiting possibilities, Somerville says, "I think we can get at least a couple of good guys this season. We've got some talent, but we're having trouble with experience."

DO YOU WANT TO FLY?

Face it... you've always wanted to fly! Many of us have had the feeling... and for some it has never gone away. If you have that feeling, then you're in luck. Air Force ROTC Flight Instruction Program (FIP) is available to you. It's designed to teach you the basics of flight through flying lessons in small aircraft at a civilian operated flying school.

The program is an EXTRA for cadets who can qualify to become Air Force pilots through Air Force ROTC. Taken during the senior year in college, FIP is the first step for the cadet who is going on to Air Force jet pilot training after graduation.

This is all reserved for the cadet who wants to get his life off the ground... with Air Force silver pilot wings. Check it out today.
