

Fifth arson spurs tightened security

Security in the TCU area has been temporarily increased to try to prevent any repeats of the five arsons that have caused nearly $1 million in damage in the last three-and-a-half weeks.

As six municipal arson investigators and one federal investigator track down leads, TCU and its two adjacent churches have hired extra security guards, publicized rewards for information about arsonists offered by a local insurance company, are locking doors early and are requiring IDs to enter some campus buildings.

Although investigators say they have suspects, they are not sure if they are on the right track or if the fires are related.

The 24-year-old TCU student who was a suspect in the first two fires, which destroyed the Baptist Student Union and damaged two rooms in Winton-Scott Hall early March 1, was not near the University Baptist Church when fire damaged it during a March 15 service. Final damage estimates for UBC are due later this week, but are expected to be around $10,000.

A suspect in the fire that extensively damaged University Christian Church March 13 was in jail that Sunday for an attempted escape from that same jail.

But Capt. W.E. Dunkin of Fort Worth's fire division said he "felt" that the two church fires were related, and TCU Police Chief Ed Carson said that the arsons may be copy-cat.

"We're looking at the possibility of a connection between the fires," Carson said. "Whoever set these later fires may have gotten the idea from the earlier fires."

On March 12, an arsonist burnt a printmaking room in Ed Landreth Hall, destroying personal and class projects.

Rae Rothfelder has a dream. She's on the University of Georgia golf course's 18th green studying a two-foot putt. It has a tricky left-to-right break. Before taking her stance over the ball, she looks at the man standing a few yards off the green.

Coach Fred Warren gives her an affirmative nod.

Rothfelder, now over the ball, looks at the putts' line. She stares at the ball a moment, knowing if she knocks it in the hole, the TCU's women's golf team will become national champions.

Rothfelder slowly swings her Bullseye putter back and then through the ball, sending it toward the hole.

Phunk.
It's in the cup!
Warren races onto the green to give Rae a congratulatory hug. Kris Hanson, Jane Grove, Marci Bozarth and Anne Kelly, the rest of the team, join him.

The Chairmen of the Boards will face the winner of the Asbury Jukes-Dangerbirds semifinal contest after spring break for the championship of TCU's independent basketball leagues.

The Chairmen defeated the Dangerbirds 42-36 last Wednesday to claim the title of the Wednesday league with a 6-0 record. Thomas Moseley dropped in 18 points to lift the team, which was without three of its regular starters. The Dangerbirds' 5-1 mark clinched a playoff berth for the team.

The Chairmen received a bye in the semifinals when Ranch Management, the second place team of the Monday league, told the intramural office that it would be unable to play any games during the week scheduled for the semifinals.

Doug Wood's 38 points lifted Army ROTC (4-2) over the Brothers (2-4) 60-44 for third place. Wood led the Wednesday league with a 24 point average. Richard Trella hit for 20 for the Brothers.

The fourth place Jokers (3-3), behind Andrew Benez's 24 points, handed the Incredible Wads their sixth straight loss, 35-15. The Falcons (1-5), who had a bye last week, ended up in fifth.

In the Monday league, defending TCU champion Asbury Jukes climaxed its 7-0 regular season with a 124-40 slaughter over winless Tau Chi. Johnny Pate's 20 points left him with a 30.4 average to win his second straight scoring title. Teammates Marty Marion (32 points) and David Blair (28) led the scoring against Tau Chi. Tau Chi's Keith Morrow canned 28 points.

Ranch Management (6-1) took sole possession of second place by knocking off the Dawgs (5-2) 42-40. Ranch Management held a 24-16 lead at the half, but the Dawgs mounted a second half comeback that fell just two points short.

Fourth place went to the Geese (4-2), who whipped Tom Brown (2-5) 52-36. Brachman (2-5) defeated the Eagles (2-5) 26-24 in their final game.

In Tuesday's Greek league, Lambda Chi (6-1) beat the defending league champion Sigma Chi (3-4) 39-30 to secure the Greek title.

The SAEs, with its 38-36 win over the Fijis (2-5), also brought its record to 6-1. However, Lambda Chi beat the SAEs earlier this year, and therefore won the championship despite equal records.

Guy Riska's 14 points led the Phi Kaps (3-4) over the Phi Deltas (4-3) 43-32, while the Kappa Sigs (4-3) got past Delta Tau Delta (0-7) 41-37.

In the women's competition, the Delta Gammas defeated the Pi Phis 45-32 in the championship game. Karen Schick led the DGs with 12 points.

Jarvis squeaked by Colby 21-20 for third place, behind Ann Reuter's nine points and Dori Dittfurth's eight.

Nuns' lives prayerful

By RICH GLENN

To many people, the idea of a monastery conjures up images of shaven monks in white robes singing Gregorian chants in a dark, stone-walled tower.

Fort Worth's Carmelite monastery, however, little resembles the typical idea of a monastery. Here, Carmelite nuns go about their daily tasks and prayers in a large, wooden home on a quiet street that overlooks the Trinity River.

The Carmelite sisters are a monastic order of the Catholic Church. The nuns live cloistered lives much in the same way they did when the order was formed in Spain in the 1500s.

For instance, each morning at 5 the nuns begin their day. Much of their time is spent in silence and solitude praying and contemplating. They attend various chapel services seven times each day.

Each nun also performs specified duties. The major source of income for the monastery is the baking of altar bread for area churches. Each week the nuns bake almost 70,000 wafers.

The Carmelite sisters see their purpose as that of society's prayer force. They pray for people and issues, both specific prayer requests that anyone may call in or send, and general prayers.

"Ours is a life of faith. We don't always see the results, but the power of prayer is very strong," Mother Maria, the prioress, says.

"We pray for those who can't or don't pray."

There are 12 nuns in Fort Worth's Carmelite monastery. Each nun lives in a small room or "cell" with a table, a chair and a bed which consists of two boards on a trundle with a foam pad.

The simple rooms and lifestyles are symbolic of the total dedication the nuns make to God. Their final vows of poverty, chastity and obedience to God are shown in their cloistered lifestyle.

"Many people don't understand why we are here or why we do this," Mother Maria says. "It's because we feel called to serve God in this particular way. We're just ordinary people called to this profession."

Mother Maria entered the Carmelite order when she was 21. Most others join between the ages of 18 and 25. The process through which a woman becomes a Carmelite nun takes five to six years.

First, a woman becomes a "postulant" for the first year. The second year, she becomes a "novice" and begins formal instructions.

At three years, the candidate takes her first vows, which are temporary. The final, solemn vows take place at five to six years, after which she is forever a Carmelite sister and cannot leave the monastery.

About one in four candidates actually take their final vows. Others leave some time before the fifth year, having decided that they could better serve God in some other way.

"To become a Carmelite sister is not something many people are called to do," Mother Maria says. "If a woman finds the lifestyle unsuitable, it's better that she leaves. Invariably she's glad for the valuable experience it was."

The world of the Carmelite nuns may appear difficult and unpleasant at first to the layperson. But the nuns are quick to stress their happiness and satisfaction with the Carmelite order.

"None of us would trade this for anything," Mother Maria says. "It's our duty to God and that's all that matters to us." etC.

Image watered down

By ROSALYN ROYAL

Sexual connotations given to waterbeds by the counterculture of the late '60s and early '70s no longer exist.

Physicians recommend them. Couples buy them for 25th wedding anniversaries. Parents allow them in their children's bedrooms.

Waterbeds are big business.

Sales which grossed $250 million nationally in 1979, turned waterbeds last year into a billion-dollar baby, according to Mark Hayes, manager of Continental Waterbeds on West Berry Street.

Some "head" shops still sell some inexpensive models, which contributes to its offbeat hippie image. Now most waterbed shops are frequented mostly by the "establishment."

"People in their 30s are our biggest buyers," said Hayes. "Nationally, one out of 10 people own waterbeds. In California, it's one out of 7."

At Continental, complete waterbed sets range from $170 to $690. The set consists of a lap-seam mattress (a smooth-seam mattress with a 14-year warranty), heater, liner, outside frame and wooden pedestal that supports the bed.

Whether king-size or twin-size, the price is the same. What makes a difference in the cost is the pedestal and accessories.

The pedestal can be a simple finished or unfinished wooden square, or it can be elaborate with the mattress resting on high, pull-out drawers with enveloping bookcases and mirrors.

The accessories can be just as unadorned or as avant garde as the wallet allows, but sedate styles for waterbeds are hard to come by. Mostly, one finds jazzy, multi-colored velvet spreads ($99-$169) or splashy, colorful comforters ($49-70). Waterbed sheets and pillowcases start at $30 a set up to $70 for satin sheets. Upholstered frames, bumper pads and even electric vibrators can be added.

Obviously, one can quickly have a sizeable investment in all this. So why this craze?

It's mainly because they are supremely, luxuriously comfortable, so comfortable that they're being routinely used in incubators for newborns (a crib mattress conversion unit sells for $150), in hospitals with burn victims and in senior citizens' homes, Hayes said.

Rest assured that you won't get seasick or drown in the bed's 220 gallons of water or be crushed by its king-size 2,000 pounds of weight.

It is also virtually impossible to be shocked because the only electric part is the heater which must meet the standards of Underwriters Laboratories. Heaters must be waterproof devices that protect against overheating and damage to the mattress, the brochures say. While a waterbed can be used without a heater, saving about $50 off the initial cost, it would be like going swimming on a freezing day.

To lie on one feels like floating on top of a swimming pool or swaying with the ocean waves. It's not disconcerting, but it does take some getting used to. Also, one doesn't hop out of a waterbed. One rolls out.

A quality system, with frame and liner and properly-constructed mattress, will not leak unless someone deliberately, and with much effort, punctures the mattress. A large dog or cat would find it next to impossible to pierce.

Even if it does happen to spring a leak, the water would be contained in the safety liner. But early versions brought lasting headaches and earned bad reputations.

Many landlords today prohibit waterbeds because of bad experiences with waterbeds that were purchased from fly-by-night operators and used without the support of a frame and a liner.

"The main protection consumers have against shoddy merchandise is to buy from a reputable, established dealer," said Hayes.

And he warned against advertising which sounds good but could be misleading. "Places that claim to sell the beds for $39.95 are just 'playing on words.' That's just the mattress," he said.

Touted as "the ultimate in sleeping comfort," it is. And the scare mythology one hears is just so much bunk. Ask the very unoffbeat, conformist, conventional couple next door.

That dream may come true June 20 in Athens, Ga., site of the AIAW national championship of women's golf.

The chance to win a national championship is rare, but because the TCU women's team is of championship caliber, the Lady Frogs will have that opportunity.

Warren, last year's Southwest Conference Golf Coach of the Year, has been at TCU almost two years now. In that time, both his men's and women's teams have become the best TCU has ever produced.

Last year, the men's team, led by all-Americans Kevin Harrison, Dave Davis and David Sann, was a bunch just trying to make the NCAA championship. They finished fourth.

That is the best ever finish for a TCU team in a NCAA championship.

If there's a way to win, she'll find it," Warren said.

But this year, the women's team could eclipse the men's 1980 effort. With two victories in the fall and spring, the women have proved capable of beating anybody in the nation.

Already this year, the Lady Frogs have beaten the defending national champions, Tulsa University, three of four tournaments. Tulsa's only victory over TCU came in the Nancy Lopez Invitational played in Tulsa on the Hurricane's home course.

Only four other teams have beaten TCU this year: Georgia, who, Warren says, is the favorite to win the national title because the tournament is being played on the Lady Dogs' home course; Florida State, another team, Warren said, that has a chance to win it all; Texas A&M; and SMU.

The Lady Frogs have played eight tournaments this year and have won four—the Susie Berning Invitational, the SMU Classic, the North Texas State Classic and the Houston Baptist Invitational—while finishing second in the Dick McGuire and Georgia Fall Invitionals. The team finished third in tournaments against Tulsa and Texas A&M.

"I think we have a very, very good team," Warren said. "But the players have the potential to get better. They've got to improve a lot in order to win the national championship."

If a national championship is won by the Lady Frogs, one reason will be because of the camaraderie between Warren and his players. A picture in Warren's Daniel-Meyer Coliseum office shows him and his players—arm over shoulders—doing a version of the can-can dance.

"We're close. We're friends. We root for each other," said Rothfelder, the team's leading player.

One can sense Warren genuinely cares for his players. When talking about each one, he thoughtfully describes them, often pausing several moments to find the right word.

Warren said Rothfelder and Kris Hanson are probably the two best freshmen women golfers in the nation.

Rothfelder, from Fort Worth, is the best known of the TCU golfers. She dominated the nation's junior golf scene while a student at Haltom High School. Rothfelder once shot a course record 62 (8-under-par) at Fort Worth's Diamond Oaks Country Club.

Said Warren, "I don't think there was any question she was the number one recruit last year. She'll set many records and standards in college golf that will stand for many years."

WINNING IS FUN—Anne Kelly, dropping another putt, is enjoying the team's success in 1981.

Last summer, Rothfelder played in the U.S. Amateur and Women's U.S. Open. Last fall, she was the low amateur in Dallas' Mary Kay Classic, tying for 32nd. Not bad for an 18-year-old.

Now, 19, Rothfelder has won two college tournaments this spring, the NTSU Classic and Houston Baptist Invitational. In the seven other tournaments as a Frog, she has tied for first once, and finished third twice, fourth twice, sixth and 13th. Her stroke average, 75, is the team's low.

"Rae is one of the top college players, if not the top one," Warren said following the Houston Baptist tourney, in which Rothfelder shot a course record 69 (2-under-par) in the final round, erasing a four shot deficit to win by five.

Warren said Rothfelder probably could make a living on the LPGA tour right now. "But she wants an education," he said. Rothfelder had a 3.53 grade point average last fall. At Haltom, she had a 3.97 gpa, finishing third in her class.

As a senior Rothfelder could be in a class by herself as a golfer, Warren said. "I could use Bum Phillips' saying about Earl Campbell to describe Rae. If I had to call roll, it wouldn't take long. But that's if she keeps improving, and there's every indication she will," he said.

Hanson could become the greatest women's golfer ever if she continues to improve, Warren said of the Granite Falls, Minn., native.

"As far as talent and ability, Kris might be the finest competitor I've ever seen, man or woman, in any sport. If there's a way to win, she'll find it," Warren said.

He said Hanson has the potential some day—either in college or on the tour—to play a game of golf other women will never be able to match.

"Including Rothfelder?"
"Including everybody," Warren answered.

The team's three other players—Jane Grove, Marci Bozarth and Anne Kelly—were invited to the AIAW championship last year as individuals, showing their ability as golfers.

Besides wanting to win the national championship for the team and school, Warren would also like to win it for Grove, the team's only senior.

who has been through the thick and thin of TCU golf.

"Her first two years here were difficult because the team wasn't winning," Warren said. "She went through a lot of hardship and disappointment."

Last year, Grove, from Fargo, N.D., in order to improve her game, had to change her entire approach to golf, Warren said. Again, it was difficult.

But she won the 1979 Kansas University Invitational individual title and played in the national championship.

Said Warren of Grove's improvement, "It's unbelievable. I haven't seen anyone improve so much in that amount of time. She'd get up before classes and hit balls. She'll make a good tour player."

Bozarth, a sophomore, is the third generation of her family to attend TCU.

While in high school at Lampasas, Bozarth won the Class 3A state championship twice and was runner-up twice. She won the 1979 Future Legends of Golf tournament, teammate Kelly came in third.

"Marci's strength is her personality," Warren said. "She's a good influence on the team with her easy-going style."

Sometimes, Bozarth was too easy going, becoming inconsistent on the course. But she has recognized her inconsistency, Warren said. Now she's a better player.

"Once she realizes how good she is," Warren said, "she might be better than what she thinks."

Kelly, a sophomore from Tucson, Ariz., was the team's best player last year. But after the Frogs' four fall tournaments, she was last on the team in stroke average (80).

"She's a short hitter, so we did a lot of things to lengthen her game," Warren said. "She went through a slump last fall because of some of those major swing changes. Now, she's a much longer hitter."

Warren said Kelly, who owns the women's course record of 66 (9-under-par) at Fort Worth's Rockwood golf course, is not as talented as a couple of the other players on the team. But, he said, she makes up for it by working extra hard.

"Like Jane, she gets up in the morning to hit balls," Warren said. "The work she has put in has a lot to do with her success."

The ingredients for a national championship are there, so is the opportunity. Now, the TCU women's golf team has to take advantage of it.

"They know they're a good team," Warren said. "I think we're the best team, outside of Georgia, who has a good chance to win (the national championship)."

Warren added, "We've accomplished some good things against top ranked teams in the country, except Georgia. And that's just a matter of time."

Rothfelder said she'd like to have that two-foot putt on the last green at the University of Georgia course to win the national championship.

"I'd probably be scared," Rothfelder said. "But I'd say a prayer and put it in the hole."

Some dreams do come true. etC.

Fifth arson spurs tightened security

Security in the TCU area has been temporarily increased to try to prevent any repeats of the five arsons that have caused nearly $1 million in damage in the last three-and-a-half weeks.

As six municipal arson investigators and one federal investigator track down leads, TCU and its two adjacent churches have hired extra security guards, publicized rewards for information about arsonists offered by a local insurance company, are locking doors early and are requiring IDs to enter some campus buildings.

Although investigators say they have suspects, they are not sure if they are on the right track or if the fires are related.

The 24-year-old TCU student who was a suspect in the first two fires, which destroyed the Baptist Student Union and damaged two rooms in Winton-Scott Hall early March 1, was not near the University Baptist Church when fire damaged it during a March 15 service. Final damage estimates for UBC are due later this week, but are expected to be around $10,000.

A suspect in the fire that extensively damaged University Christian Church March 13 was in jail that Sunday for an attempted escape from that same jail.

But Capt. W.E. Dunkin of Fort Worth's fire division said he "felt" that the two church fires were related, and TCU Police Chief Ed Carson said that the arsons may be copy-cat.

"We're looking at the possibility of a connection between the fires," Carson said. "Whoever set these later fires may have gotten the idea from the earlier fires."

On March 12, an arsonist burnt a printmaking room in Ed Landreth Hall, destroying personal and class projects.

After meeting with Chancellor Bill Tucker and Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs Bill Koehler on March 15, Carson hired extra security guards at a cost of $450 per day to patrol the campus. Carson would not say how many extra guards had been hired, but said they would be on duty at least throughout the week. A Pinkerton detective has been hired by the contractors of the Moudy building to protect construction.

"We have some areas we feel are particularly vulnerable and we're watching those continuously," Carson said. "We can't continue this kind of security indefinitely."

That security includes requiring faculty, staff and students to show identification to enter the library, and locking university buildings as early as possible. A fire department patrol unit still patrols the campus.

Board allows, doesn't condone drinking in rooms

By KATTIGRAY
Staff Writer

Students of legal age can possess and drink alcohol in their dorm rooms next semester, the TCU Board of Trustees decided in its annual spring meeting March 20.

Drinking in other areas of the university, however, will still be prohibited.

As a part of its decision, the board said the university will develop an alcohol educational program that "will help students make informed decisions about whether to drink... and how to handle alcohol responsibly."

Use of alcohol had been prohibited around campus before the board's revision, although most students who drink did not heed the policy. Because the university did not enforce the policy, many students accused the administration of hypocrisy and asked that an enforceable policy be adopted.

The Student House of Representatives was especially vocal in opposing the no-alcohol policy. Legislation dealing with the policy dates back to the mid-1970s. Last year the House wrote an alcohol policy study and submitted it to Chancellor Tucker for his consideration.

When Tucker made no response to the study, the House this semester held a referendum to determine student opinion on the policy. Almost 30 percent of eligible students voted, and 67 percent of those said they wanted alcohol allowed in their dorm rooms.

House officials, however, would not claim the referendum influenced the board's decision.

The primary business matter before the trustees, however, was the budget. Tucker said revisions may be necessary in the future as the university learns how many funds will be cut by the federal government. Funds for student aid and research are likely to drop significantly.

Changes in the federal student aid program will probably affect TCU students. Currently 948 students are receiving Basic Educational Opportunity Grants averaging slightly above $1,000 annually. This average is based on a maximum allowable grant of $1,750.

So far, only enough funds for a maximum grant of $1,250 have been approved. According to the board, the action threatens to cut all grants proportionately. Students depending on a full grant for next year may face problems. It will be July or August before a final decision on the federal program will be made.

To offset any possible loss of federal student aid, the board approved $400,000 from TCU's current year income to help students whose expectations for next year are built on current programs. The TCU funds will be used only if the federal program is cut. TCU had already provided $2 million in financial aid in the current budget.

TCU research is also expected to suffer from federal cuts. An expected loss of $700,000 in one federally funded research contract will mean a cut in some research programs.

The largest impact will likely be on the Institute of Behavioral Research, said Tucker. Much of the institute's work relates to a study of drug abuse and treatment. Researchers have been told informally that a three-year contract will end this summer after only one year's operation.

Despite the negative impact on the current budget, Tucker said he supported "the dramatic move to restore fiscal responsibility in Washington."

Budget projections for 1981-82 are also based on stable enrollment, Tucker said. The forecast is for about 100 more spaces necessary in campus residence halls for next fall. Administrative offices housed in dormitory rooms are being relocated to provide more space for rooms.

The budget, approximately $42.5 million, is 13 percent higher than last year's. The amount for faculty and staff raises is also 13 percent higher.

In other action, the board approved a contract with Walker Construction Co. of Fort Worth for the library addition. Groundbreaking will be April 11.

Doctors can tell parents about daughters' abortion. A doctor asked to perform an abortion on a teen-ager still dependent on her parents for support can be required to try to tell them about it if he thinks the girl is too immature to make the decision alone.

That is the effect of a 6-3 Supreme Court ruling Monday that upheld the constitutionality of a Utah law challenged by "H.E.L." and several other unidentified girls represented by Salt Lake City lawyer David S. Dolowitz.

The ruling said the state law is constitutional specifically as applied to a minor female living with and dependent on her parents and who has not shown enough maturity to make her own decision.

Economists say deficit to be larger than Reagan projects.

Congressional economists are standing by projections that the federal deficit will be at least $80 billion more than the Reagan administration figures over the next four years.

The Congressional Budget Office said its best estimate is that President Reagan's economic plan will result in budget deficits this year of almost $8 billion more than the administration predicts, $22 billion more in 1982 and $49 billion more in 1984, the year Reagan has promised a surplus.

If correct, the CBO predictions would require higher spending cuts and lower tax reductions than Reagan is recommending to meet his goal of balancing the budget by 1984.

Reagan proposes military aid for Pakistan. The Reagan administration is proposing a $500 million military and economic aid package to Pakistan— which has not yet agreed to accept it— as part of its strategy to contain Soviet expansionism in Southern Asia.

The proposal, up from $400 million in military aid alone proposed by former President Carter, breaks down to $400 million in military aid and $100 million in economic assistance.

Carter's proposed aid was rejected by Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq.

Salvadoran guerrillas accuse White House of canceling secret talks. Two Salvadoran opposition leaders say a secret agreement for talks between the Reagan White House and representatives of El Salvador's Marxist-backed guerrillas collapsed last month when administration officials canceled a planned meeting.

State Department officials, however, say no meeting was ever scheduled and accuse the insurgents of floating stories about canceled meetings as a propaganda ploy.

A foreign diplomatic official knowledgeable about efforts to arrange a negotiated settlement to the Salvadoran strife said the United States had canceled a planned meeting in February. The official, who asked not to be identified, said the decision to meet with the insurgents was made at "very high" levels of the administration.

Dope now not only for dopers

The country has changed a lot since Jefferson Starship was Jefferson Airplane and Grace Slick was whining for us to remember what the door mouse said.

Drug use was tied to back alleys and vacant lots then and television and high school gymnasiums were peppered with anti-drug films.

No longer is this the case—in the country, in Fort Worth or at TCU.

Now such popular television series as Taxi are dealing with drugs lightheartedly. A recent episode had one naive character baking cocaine into a cookie recipe, giving his co-workers "snowblind" euphoria.

Drugs

Users, pushers and the frustrated law

A 3-part series

Marijuana use has now been decriminalized in 11 states, meaning that possession of small amounts is no longer a felony but a misdemeanor punishable by fines up to $250.

In 1978, the main focus of the marijuana issue changed from controversy over penalties to controversy over health. Pot smokers rallied to end the spraying of the pesticide paraquat on Mexican marijuana because it was making its way into American pipes and bongs.

As New Mexico, Florida and Illinois passed laws allowing medical use of marijuana, the Federal Drug Administration released a report recognizing the legitimate medical use of the drug.

Classroom techniques apply in drug market

These days Mark (not his real name) is more interested in playing the futures market than in marketing.

Today he watches and interprets the stock market. Not long ago his energies were routed into something much more immediately profitable.

Mark earned much more than just a business degree at TCU; Mark got some invaluable practical experience, too—enough to earn him sufficient extra cash to leave a student budget by the wayside for an entire year.

He was in the drug market.

Marketing drugs isn't so different from marketing widgets, except that widgets may become obsolete someday, and recreational drugs probably won't.

Mark said he discovered that the business techniques he was using had names when he took a marketing class.

Refining the techniques of production, price, promotion and distribution soon allowed him to be regarded as the biggest and most successful drug dealer at TCU.

Skiff named best university paper in state

The TCU Daily Skiff was named the best university newspaper in the state Saturday by The Associated Press Managing Editors' association.

The award—First Place in General Excellence in the 1980 University and College Division—was announced at the APME's annual meeting in San Antonio March 19-21.

The Skiff won the organization's top prize on the criteria of overall superiority in "headline, leads and writing," with special recognition being given to the Skiff's "very strong editorial pages." The Skiff's three entries, the maximum allowed by contest rules, were the Sept. 11, Nov. 5 and Nov. 21 editions.

The APME's awards competition, which acknowledges excellence in many categories in the state's professional press, grants a first prize to the student press in the single category of general excellence.

Second prize in the university division went to The Ram Page, Angelo State University, and honorable mention to The Shorthorn, University of Texas at Arlington.

All entries in the competition, which this year totaled more than 2,000, are judged by out-of-state professionals.

God to highest bidder

Remember when salesmen sold brushes, pans and the Encyclopedia Britannica?

Today, the product is God. And the profits have never been higher.

Every Sunday morning, a dozen or so evangelists parade across our TV screens. They scorn us, bless us and relay the personal chats they had with God the week before.

Then, with our "sins" forgiven, the collection plate slaps us square in the face.

Oral Roberts, live and in color from TV studios at his Oklahoma university, repeats his need for money to build a medical center. Clenching his fists and squeezing shut his eyes, he relives his "dream" of God holding the Bible in one hand and the Oral Roberts Medical Center in the other.

Change the channel. Jimmy Swaggert warns us of the disbelievers. He then asks all true Christians to send $46-$1 for every year of his "blessed" life—to pay for the $1.5 million Swaggert TV studio.

The Rev. Sun Myung Moon, original "moonie" and founder of the Unification Church, offers earthly bliss and peace through his religion. Meanwhile, he delights in every joy that $10 million of personal property can afford.

The age now gives rise to another "messenger from God," the Moral Majority. Little more than a lobbying group, the organization bastardizes its "moral" name and God; it is leverage to influence legislation. Its opponents are never forgiven; rather, it hopes, they are forced from office.

Regardless, Oral Roberts will get his medical center, Jimmy Swaggert his TV studio and James Robison and his Moral Majority a power over people and politics for years to come.

And why do they have such power? Do people follow out of a fear of death or a quest for salvation? Or do we long to be led, no matter who plays the role?

Mankind may claim a long history of misguided leaders—many eccentric, many dangerous. From Genghis Khan to Adolf Hitler, we have listened to what they say without ever really hearing what was said. And we follow.

Today's selfish evangelism leaves more than just a sour taste; it leaves open the door for blind worship and disaster.

Ask the followers of the People's Temple and the Rev. Jim Jones . . . if we only could.

Rhetoric reveals no party purists

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON—President Reagan has promised to dance with the people who brought him to the party, telling "fellow conservatives" that they stand together and that he intends to keep it that way.

He told the Conservative Political Action conference that it is a consistent philosophy of government, not one of chaotic agendas for assorted issues.

But what is clear and consistent to conservative officials and political activists may not be so for the people they seek to lead. A report published by a Washington think tank—an organization that sent the administration some of its top appointees—suggests that there aren't many ideological purists out there, conservative or liberal.

"While there can be no doubt that important movement toward conservatism has occurred at the levels of public policy and elite opinion, there is reason for caution in attributing to the general public a swing in this direction," says Everett Carl Ladd, writing in Public Opinion, a journal published by the American Enterprise Institute.

"Most people just are not conservatives or liberals in any wide-ranging ideological sense," Ladd says, pointing to a series of published polls on political attitudes.

That suggests that people who classify themselves as liberals are not out of Reagan's reach, even on some of the very issues he identifies as conservative hallmarks.

Addressing activist conservatives Friday night, Reagan went heavy on doctrine.

"Fellow citizens, fellow conservatives—our time is now, our moment has arrived," Reagan said. "We stand together, shoulder to shoulder in the thickest of the fight . . ."

"Because ours is a consistent philosophy of government, we can be very clear: we do not have a separate social agenda, a separate economic agenda and a separate foreign agenda," he said. "We have one agenda."

"Just as surely as we seek to put our financial house in order and rebuild our nation's defenses, so too we seek to protect the unborn, to end the manipulation of schoolchildren by utopian planners and permit the acknowledgment of a supreme being in our classrooms . . ."

One long sentence, four conservative issues: budget cutting, increased defense spending, opposition to abortion and advocacy of prayer in public schools.

Ladd also says, for example, that self-described liberals and conservatives do not differ widely on government spending in the opinion polls conducted prior to Reagan's current campaign to cut the budget. Both groups said the government was spending too much on foreign aid and on welfare.

CBS cooks up honest Dixie

By PETER J. BOYER

LOS ANGELES—It's very nice to see the Alex Haley-Norman Lear creation, "Palmerstown," back on television for the CBS spring season. Prime time, and CBS especially, owe Dixie that much.

Sometimes wonder whether young viewers outside the South grow up believing that region to be a sort of living cartoon peopled by Yankee Li'l Abner types who say YOU all instead of ya all. The Southerner, according to "Flo," "Dukes of Hazzard," "Concrete Cowboys," "Enos" and "Lobo," is a boorish lout whose time on this planet is spent in pursuit of the loudest whoop and longest screech of tire.

But "Palmerstown," returning to the CBS schedule for a limited run, is a different place. It's a small-town South of enduring strengths and values, a place of manners and passions and life's lessons, mean and gentle, a real place, a place to grow up in.

The central characters in the story belong to two families, one black, one white, that coexist in a gray region surpassing neighborliness onto friendship. It's a favorite theme of Haley's, who rediscovered in his "Roots II" research a special relationship between blacks and whites that is the tender underside of the region's grim racial history.

More, "Palmerstown" is simply good TV: entertaining family television of the sort that "The Waltons" served up for all those years.

This season's first episode employed TV's favorite tools, sex and violence, to uplifting ends. W.D.'s teenage boy Willie-Joe, swooned by love, offered to marry the pregnant daughter of his Daddy's longtime enemy, even though he's not the father of the expected child. Shotgun were wielded and threats made, but fear and ignorance eventually yielded to wisdom, and a satisfactory conclusion was reached.

Next Tuesday, CBS will take us to "Palmerstown." No spitting or belching is allowed—thank heavens. So, if you live outside the South, and you have been feeding on a steady diet of "Dukes of Hazzard" and "Lobo," fall in front of the tube and tune in CBS.

Letters

Rep requests more T.E.G.

Dear Editors:

I don't write many letters to the editor, but we have some legislation soon to come before the House Appropriations and Senate Finance committees that is of the greatest interest to TCU and all private colleges and universities in Texas. This legislation is for allocation of funds for the Tuition Equalization Grant (T.E.G.) program.

The T.E.G. program was signed into law in 1971, under then-Governor Preston Smith. It provided for funds to be appropriated directly for students at the so-called "ICUT schools" (Independent Colleges and Universities of Texas); the amount would be adjusted each legislative session.

But, in 1979, the procedure was changed. A statute was drawn up empowering the Texas Legislature to grant each ICUT student a maximum grant equal to one-half the cost of tuition at a state school. The state school figure, presently assessed at $3,000, means that each student at a private college who qualifies for T.E.G. could receive $1,500.

This is where the TCU student body comes in. The amount proposed for the T.E.G. program by the Legislative Budget Board stands at $36 million. Though this is a substantial increase over the amount allocated last year, those of us in strong support of the T.E.G. program would like to see the figure increased to $45 million.

The men and women at TCU should take an interest. Write letters to your state senators and representatives urging them to vote for the $45 million appropriation.

Overcrowding no answer

Dear Editors:

We are residents of one of the corner rooms in Clark Dormitory. We have heard that Housing plans to convert the rooms in which we now reside into rooms for three men.

There are a lot of problems that have gone unconsidered. It is true that our rooms are slightly larger than the rest; however, we feel they are far too small for three people to live comfortably for eight months. The rooms could hold three beds only if two are set in bunk beds. Then, there is the problem of study desks; the rooms are furnished with but two desks. The tight situation also applies to closet space, where closets are not at all large enough for two men to share.

The problem then pushes into individual privacy. What would two of the roommates do if the third wished to be alone or have over a guest? How would visitation be adjusted?

We realize that a housing shortage exists at TCU, but would assigning three people to a room large enough for two really alleviate the problem? We think not. Why not convert the second floor lounge to the TV Room? The lounge, usually deserted, is much larger than the current TV Room. This way there would be an extra room for two men to live comfortably, no overcrowding.

Administrators have nice homes to which they may retreat after a long day. After classes, these dorm rooms are our homes. We believe research should have been done before Housing made its final decision. Is this an example of how such serious situations are handled? Will students forever be without a voice?

For the amount of money we pay, we deserve at least a comfortable room. These rooms are our homes for a long time.

Voters deserve thanks

Dear Editors:

As members of the Student House of Representatives, we found ourselves intensely involved in the March 5 alcohol referendum.

Needless to say, we were somewhat afraid of the twin specters of defeat. Such looming specters were whether the majority of students would feel motivated to vote—a rather infrequent outcome at TCU—or, even worse, if the students who did bother to vote would come out strongly against alcohol. Such a negative student reaction would have been a tragedy.

Fortunately, the vote was favorable: 67 percent wanted alcohol allowed on campus. Because of this, we wish to extend our warmest regards to all those students and faculty members who expressed concern and decided to get involved. We also hope that the administration at this university take the proper cue from this rather clear victory for higher education.

Women swim to third in nation

BALANCED BART - Bart Conner shows his strength in the still rings event at the American Cup gymnastics championships held at the Tarrant County Convention Center last weekend. Conner took the men's all-around title and Julianne McNamara won the women's all-around championship.

Asbury Jukes win independent hoop title

The Asbury Jukes defeated the Chairmen of the Boards, 61-42, to win the independent basketball championship. Marty Marion led the Jukes with 16 points and they will play Lambda Chi, the greek league champs, for the overall title, Wednesday at 4:30 in Daniel-Meyer Coliseum.

The Jukes lead the whole way despite being held to their lowest point total of the year. The Jukes record is now 9-0 and they are the favorite to win their second consecutive school championship.

Both the Jukes and the Chairmen advanced to the finals through forfeits. The Dangerbirds bowed out to the Jukes and Ranch Management was unable to meet for their game with the Chairmen.

Thomas Moseley led the Chairmen with 16 points, as they finish their season, 8-1. Lambda Chi's record is 6-1, succeeding Sigma Chi as the champs in the greek league.

An impressive, glittering new trophy now towers two feet high above the clutter flooding the desk of swim coach Richard Sybesma.

The trophy boldly reads, "THIRD PLACE 1981 AJAW DIVISION II SWIMMING AND DIVING CHAMPIONSHIPS." The trophy is a week-and-a-half old.

TCU's women's swim team set four national records March 14 on their way to capturing third place at the Division II national championships held in Marquette, Mich.

The Horned Frogs finished with 327 total points, behind defending champion Clarion State (Pennsylvania) with 439 and the Air Force Academy with 372.

Last year, TCU's women finished in 32nd place with two points.

"We had some mixed reactions," Sybesma said. "We were all really pleased with how far we came and how well we did, but we did have some hopes of winning it."

Freshman Susan Sepannen was the top scorer for the Frogs, setting national records in the 50-, 100- and 200-yard backstrokes in her lifetime best times.

"Awesome, just awesome," Sybesma said of Sepannen.

"I was happy that I could do so well, and really glad about the records," said Sepannen, a public relations major from Torrance, Calif.

"Next year, I want to stay on top and improve my times. It's going to take a lot of training," she said.

Dea Fredrick, another freshman, set TCU's fourth national record in the 50-yard freestyle and took second in the 100 freestyle.

Both Sepannen and Fredrick were members of the first place 200-yard medley relay team, whose time was six-tenths of one second off the national record. The same team, consisting of Kim Healy and Cathy MacLane also, finished second in the 400-yard medley relay.

Fredrick made an incredible comeback for her team as the anchor in the 200 relay. TCU was trailing by half a length when Fredrick entered the pool. Her speed in the final freestyle sprint gave TCU a winning lead of nearly two lengths.

MacLane set school records in the 50- and 100-yard fly with her lifetime best times. Versatile freshman Becky Brill swam in five events, scoring in four of them.

Eight of TCU's swimmers, Sepannen, Fredrick, Healy, MacLane, Brill, Karen Andrews, Linda Wadsworth and Dianne Stiles, were named All-American.

"At the beginning of the year, we were looking at the top 10. To finish third was great," Sybesma said. "But as far as next year, we're not looking for anything short of first."

TCU's placing behind Clarion and Air Force was mainly the result of the diving events. Clarion's diver won the championship, while Air Force sent five divers into the finals. TCU did not bring any to the meet.

"That's a lot of points," Sybesma said.

This problem should not arise in the future, he said. Diving coach Pat Kiehl is already recruiting several good divers, and the team's new reputation should bring in a few on its own.

TCU will be returning all but one swimmer to its 1981-82 team. Senior co-captain Nancy Trask will be leaving the team after lettering two straight seasons.

"We'll miss Nancy both in the water and out," Sybesma said. "She's a good leader."

Sybesma, who recruited six high school All-Americans last year, has already landed one of the nation's best breaststrokers for next year. He signed Dori Vollmar of Industrial City, Calif., a qualifier in two events at last summer's Olympic trials.

"She's a good one. The breaststroke was our weakest swimming area this year, and next year it should be our best. And with our diving recruits, I'm looking to win it all next year," Sybesma said.

TCU takes two from Hoosiers

The TCU Horned Frog baseball team won its fifth consecutive game by sweeping the University of Indiana, 2-1 and 7-3, Tuesday at the TCU diamond.

Glen Pierce fired a three-hitter for TCU, allowing only an unearned run in the fourth inning. TCU came back to win it in the bottom of the inning as Mark Eiter doubled with one out and scored one out later on a double by Tom Houk. Houk then scored on a single by shortstop Warren Oliver to give TCU the lead and the win, 2-1.

TCU, 13-7, took the second game after trailing 3-0. The Frogs rallied for seven runs, led by Trey Brooks who gave the Frogs a key two-run single and later stole home for their final run.

Chris Leiss (2-1), went the distance for TCU, the fourth complete game in a row for Frog pitchers.

Before the Indiana doubleheader, the Horned Frogs had won 11 of their last 13 games, including two of three games with Arkansas in their only conference match-up thus far. TCU is currently in second place in the SWC, with a 2-1 mark.

After dropping six of their first eight games the Frogs settled down and won nine of their next 10. Pitcher Jeff Long won three games in the stretch, two complete games, and Mark Eiter raised his batting average nearly 150 points in the ten game streak bringing his average up to .349, third on the team. Scott Wagner came off the bench to knock in seven runs in the last six games he's played in and is hitting at .364.

Senior outfielder Luis Rojas leads the team in seven offensive categories including batting average (.380), RBIs (18), slugging percentage (.760) and home runs (5).

Trey Brooks, senior second-baseman, is hitting at a .314 clip and leads the team in runs scored (17), walks (15) and has an unblemished stealing percentage, successfully burglarizing 15 bases in 15 attempts.

Pierce lead the staff with a 2.08 earned run average before pitching seven innings against the Hoosiers without an earned run, and now posts a 3-2 record.

The Horned Frogs next contest will be on Friday at 3 p.m. against the Aggies of Texas A&M at the TCU diamond. The Aggies are currently tied with the Frogs for second in the conference standings.
