Campaign intern system may be illegal

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The University of Texas System is investigating whether the practice of assigning students to work in political campaigns for college credit is a violation of state law, the San Antonio Light reported in a copyright story.

The newspaper said three dozen graduate and undergraduate students are working in Austin and San Antonio as interns for candidates including state Sen. Lloyd Doggett, former U.S. Rep. Bob Krueger and Bexar County Judge Albert Bustamante.

The Light reported Sunday that the work being performed by the students—such as writing press releases and conducting policy research—would cost the candidates hundreds of dollars without the free help.

State law prohibits state employees or state-administered programs from being used to "affect the result of an election or nomination of a candidate or to achieve any other political purpose," the newspaper said.

The Light also reported that University of Texas at Austin President Peter Flawn, who was president of the University of Texas at San Antonio from 1973 to 1977, instructed UTSA faculty members in a 1976 memo that interns "should not participate in campaigns."

The Flawn memo said that the college credit students received was "valuable consideration," and that the university "may not provide a valuable consideration for participating in partisan political activities."

UT-Austin Professor Richard Kraemer, who assigned 35 students to campaigns for credit this spring, defended the practice as an "academically respectable" method of teaching students about the Democratic process.

"We have a democracy and it operates in a partisan political system," said Kraemer, an author of various texts on Texas politics.

"If in a democratic society you can't investigate that in a scholarly manner, then all is lost," he said.

The newspaper said one of the students receiving credit for his work as a researcher was also being used by Bustamante's campaign.

Lynn Taylor, an attorney for the system's Office of General Counsel, said the system began investigating the practice last week.

"From an academic standpoint, it's a valuable tool," Taylor said, "but if it violates state law, we need to determine that and stop it."

The newspaper said that in Austin, Doggett's campaign for the Democratic U.S. Senate nomination is benefiting from the work of 15 interns. Krueger, one of Doggett's opponents, said he had one intern who recently became a paid staffer. U.S. Rep. Kent Hance, also running for the nomination, does not have any interns working for him, the newspaper said.

The Light said Taylor was in San Antonio on Friday to investigate the circumstances surrounding the assignment of Ramon Valdez, a political science graduate student, to Bustamante's congressional campaign.

The newspaper said the $200-a-week position was arranged by UTSA instructor Robert Ashcroft, who has served as an unpaid consultant for the Bustamante campaign.

Tom Bellows, director of the Division of Social and Policy Sciences at UTSA, admitted that the university has prohibited undergraduates from working in partisan campaigns for years, and he conceded that the Valdez case "slipped by me."

Bellows said the university had informed Valdez on March 12 that he would not receive credit for his work with Bustamante.

"As I read it (the prohibition), it applies to this," Bellows said.

Valdez responded in writing that it was unfair for him to suffer for the university's mistake. He said that the law "points out the innocent student is not the person who should receive the sanctions for violations of this law."

Taylor said the UT System administration, which administers and sets policy for all the component institutions, would be making a decision on the legality of interns serving in partisan campaigns in the near future.

Honors Week salutes academic achievement

By Denise Gonzalez
Staff writer of the TCU Daily Skiff

The annual celebration of academic achievement began Monday as the presentation of the Senior Honors Projects touched off the Honors Week Program.

The Honors Program, a university-wide organization, is the sponsor of Honors Week. H.C. Kelly, director of the Honors Program, characterized Honors Week as "a period of time set aside in the spring specifically to acknowledge and celebrate academic achievement, a time to recognize students for their scholarship achievement."

Kelly said that it's a chance to get together and say this is what the main thrust of activity in the university is all about—academics. "It's a time to acknowledge that (academics) and to particularly recognize those who do it particularly well."

The Senior Honor Projects, Kelly said, are similar to an undergraduate thesis. The projects vary from manuscripts to originally choreographed dances.

Honors Week is also held to recognize honor students as well as those who are not members of the Honors Program but have achieved something in terms of scholarship.

Kelly said many honor students will be participating in Honors Week. "Most importantly these honors students will decide who this year's Honors Professor shall be."

The Honors Professor award will be presented during the Honors Convocation, which will be held on Thursday at 11 a.m. in Ed Landreth Auditorium. "Thursday is the high point of the week, the convocation is an especially exciting time," Kelly said.

One highlight of Honors Week is the visiting scholar who presents the convocation address. This year Pulitzer Prize winning playwright Edward Albee will present the address. His lecture is entitled "The Playwright vs. The Theatre."

How does Kelly feel about Honors Week? "It's wall-to-wall chaos, but it's fun and an exciting time of the year. There's a lot of excitement among honors students and faculty."

Tuesday's schedule includes the conclusion of the Seniors Honors Projects from 1:40-4:40 p.m. in the Faculty Center. The Pi Kappa Lambda Honors Recital will be held on Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Ed Landreth Auditorium.

The Honors Banquet will be held on Thursday at 6:30 p.m. in the Student Center Ballroom. During the banquet there will be a recognition of students who have won Senior Scholar and Scholastic Awards.

Also during the banquet there will be a presentation of the Sigma Xi Award to the Outstanding Senior in Liberal Studies and the presentation of the Paul Boller Award for the Outstanding Senior Honors Project.

The banquet is held in honor of the professor who received the faculty recognition award the previous year which is Paul F. Boller Jr, emeritus professor of history. Boller will also give the banquet address, "Next Question, Please?"

Gaye Sr. jailed in slaying of singer Marvin Gaye

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The father of sweet-voiced soul singer Marvin Gaye was jailed without bail Monday, accused by authorities of shooting his son to death when "bad blood" between them erupted into a fatal fight over insurance.

Gaye, part of the generation of singers who originated the Motown sound in the 1960s, died Sunday afternoon on the eve of his 45th birthday. He was shot twice in the chest at the home he shared with his parents, police said.

Marvin Gaye Sr., 69, was booked for investigation of murder at police headquarters nearly eight hours after the shooting, said Sgt. Mike Pattee.

The younger Gaye's life ended amid a hard-fought revival of a career that saw 13 Top 10 songs from 1963 through 1977, including "I Heard It Through the Grapevine," "What's Going On" and, with Tammi Terrell, "Ain't Nothing Like the Real Thing."

Gaye, who had been working on another album, had battled through two divorces and drug problems, years without hits, a bankruptcy declaration and a back tax bill put at $2 million. The singer had recently been named in a battery complaint, police said, and a neighbor said Gaye and his father had quarreled recently.

The fatal argument began Saturday night and involved "some insurance dealings," said police Lt. Robert Martin. He said it was rooted "in bad blood" but did not elaborate.

Shakeup in Honduras, El Salvador still settling

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Joint U.S.-Honduran military maneuvers are proceeding on schedule despite a shakeup in the Honduran armed forces which forced out the nation's most powerful general and three other commanders.

In El Salvador, official results of last week's presidential election were released Sunday and, as expected, forced a runoff between centrist Christian Democrat Jose Napoleon Duarte and Roberto d'Aubuisson of the ultra-rightist Republican Nationalist Alliance. Duarte finished first with 43.4 percent of the vote, while d'Aubuisson received 29.8 percent. The runoff election is expected to be in either four or five weeks.

The forced resignation of Gen. Gustavo Alvarez Martinez, the Honduran armed forces chief considered the most powerful figure in the country, was announced by the government Saturday. Alvarez Martinez had worked closely with the Reagan administration in plans to put pressure on the leftist Sandinista government of neighboring Nicaragua.

"The events of the last hours... are not an obstacle for the beginning of the joint exercises between the armies of the United States and Honduras, which are taking place as planned," a government statement said.

The three-month series of exercises began Sunday.

No reasons were given for ousting Alvarez Martinez and three other generals—Gen. Daniel Bali Castillo, commander of the state security police; Gen. Jose Bueso Rosa, armed forces chief of staff, and Gen. Ruben Montoya, head of the navy.

President Roberto Suazo Cordova assumed command of the military and assured citizens all was calm in the country.

Quoting unidentified Honduran officials, The New York Times reported today that Alvarez Martinez was ousted because a group of younger military officers were unhappy with his plans to restructure the army and his autocratic leadership style.

The first phase of the U.S.-Honduran maneuvers, known as Granadero I, calls for 800 U.S. Army engineers to build two dirt airstrips, one at Cucuyagua about 35 miles from the Salvadoran border, and the other at Jamastran about 20 miles from the Nicaraguan border.

The locations were selected to increase pressure on leftist guerrillas in El Salvador and on the Sandinista government, said diplomatic sources who spoke on condition they not be identified.

The second phase of the maneuvers, May 23-June 30, will involve about 1,000 U.S. troops practicing counterinsurgency tactics with Honduran and possibly Guatemalan and Salvadoran troops.

Lt. Col. James Strachan, the U.S. Embassy's defense spokesman, said U.S. forces would not get closer than five miles to the Nicaraguan border and "effective control measures," including radar, would prevent border incidents.

New cancer treatment may not be as harsh

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A new anti-cancer drug that transforms tumor cells into near normal cells without the devastating side effects of existing chemotherapy is being tested on humans for the first time, researchers say.

"It's extremely appealing to have an agent that rather than execute the tumors will reform them," said Daniel Dexter, a researcher with E.I. du Pont de Nemours and Company.

Speaking Sunday at a science writers' seminar sponsored by the American Cancer Society, Dexter said that existing drugs are highly toxic to normal cells as well as cancer cells.

The new drug, called N-methylformamide, is one of a class of drugs that invade cancer cells and somehow cause them to mature into cells that are almost normal. It is not known how the drugs work.

These near normal cells lose the ability to grow wildly into the tangled knots of tissue found in tumors.

The new drugs, called differentiation agents or maturation agents, are industrial solvents whose anti-cancer properties were discovered by accident in the early 1970s, Dexter said.

Current trials with human patients are what are called Phase I studies, intended only to make sure that the drugs do not have unexpected side-effects, Dexter said.

Phase II tests scheduled to begin this summer should begin to show whether the drug is as effective in humans as it has been in mice, he said.

Man suspected in slaying of deputy killed

TEXARKANA, Ark. (AP) — A Texan who had been sought in the slaying of an Arkansas sheriff's deputy was shot to death as he opened fire on a helicopter crew hunting him, police said.

Miller County Sheriff Ken Sinyard said Roger Dale Porier, 32, of Texarkana, Texas, died before dawn Sunday when the helicopter's spotlight found him in a wooded area near Eylau, Texas.

Deputy Charles Barnes, 45, of the Miller County Sheriff's Department was shot in the back of the head Saturday night after he stopped a car, Sinyard said. Officers found Barnes' body early Sunday near his patrol car on a rural Arkansas road, and the manhunt began. Before he died, Barnes had called in the license number of the other car and his location.

More than 100 officers from Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas and Oklahoma—some of them off-duty volunteers—used tracking dogs in the search, he said.

By David Alan Hall

Good things in life will wait

I know it's a cliché, but isn't it funny how time flies when you're having fun? I don't know about you, but spring break was one of the fastest seven days of my life—because I was having fun.

Besides doing the usual amount of weekly homework—writing an analysis paper, composing a 3,000 word narrative of fact and reading a thick novel—I spent my spring break making a movie. Actually, I started working on the movie long before spring break looked even close on a five-year calendar. And despite full-time efforts last week, the picture isn't anywhere near completion.

Along with the rest of my merry little band of filmmakers, I did manage to complete most of the principal photography (some of it will have to be reshot, but don't tell them that), and it came out great. But a week just isn't long enough to produce a movie, not even a short one like I'm making.

What inevitably happens when I begin working on a project, especially a big one like a motion picture, is that I become captivated with it, and suddenly it seems that I live for nothing but the project. It means a lot to me. I love it, I'll do anything to make it better than it is, and I want to see it completed—as soon as possible.

That's what happened to me with this movie. I've been making short films for a few years now, but I've never before been so fascinated and excited about a movie as I am with this one. Thanks to a few lucky breaks, a little hard work and the two best parents in the world, I've been fortunate enough to acquire over the years my own little production facility. It has everything I need to make movies.

And I'm to the point with this movie where it's time to put down the camera and start editing and mixing. That's my favorite part, and the footage looks spectacular. So naturally I'm excited. Now, all I need is about a month to put the thing together. But a small problem has arisen: It's time to go to school again. That means no more filmmaking for a while. That means all the spectacular footage goes back on the shelf. I have to put the project on the back burner for a while.

And it's hard to do, because right now I'm excited about the project and want to finish it. But college isn't like high school. Like everyone else who is lucky enough to go to TCU, I have a responsibility to my grades, my parents and most of all, to myself. It's time to go to school again, and the film will have to wait.

I guess it's kind of like saying goodbye to your girlfriend for a while. You miss her, think about her, but you have to go on with life and reality. Sure, you can write to her and talk to her on the phone, but it isn't the same. For me, filmmaking is like that, maybe even more so. Movies, especially this one, find their main roots in fantasy and make-believe. Reality, I'm sorry to say, is not a movie.

And when I work on a movie, I have a tendency to lose my grip on reality. I sit out there in my editing hub until all hours of the night, making the bad guys mean and nasty and making the good guys nice and heroic. Sure, they're larger than life characters, and they're fun to work with, especially since I created them and watched them mature on film.

It was early in December of 1983 that I got the idea for the picture. I spent my winter break writing it and the three months between then and now rewriting and developing it. I spent all last week filming it.

Now, I want to finish it. I'm tired of developing it. I just want to sit down with some popcorn and a cola and watch this movie. I want people to come in and watch it with me, and I want them to have a good time and enjoy it. I want them to laugh and cry with it. I want people to see what I've spent the last four months of my life working on. I'm tired of keeping everything to myself.

But it will have to wait.

The 30 hours of film and magnetic track will have to sit on the shelf and the 30 pages of the soiled script will have to remain in the drawer. That's the bad thing—it will have to wait. The good thing is: It will wait. And it'll be there when I return.

Praise due TCU community for labor of love

An Associated Press wire story last week told of a family in Texas that killed and ate rats for food. It was their only source of protein. The shock of world hunger is everywhere, and this was just one more tale of human desperation moving closer to home.

We at TCU are sheltered from poverty. Hunger is easily satisfied by a trip to the snack bar. Warm clothing is stuffed away in boxes as the first sign of spring hits the campus.

Concern for the human race, however, moved our community to share in the struggle to end world poverty. TCU has shown it is not a selfish lot through its donation of food and clothing to a homeless people, the Kickapoo Indians. Some 670 members of this tribe were left stranded with one water supply and houses made of cane and cardboard beneath the International Bridge at Eagle Pass, Texas.

The TCU House of Student Representatives should be applauded for having passed a resolution aimed at bettering the lives of people outside the perimeters of TCU. The move was not made to earn good press, but one to show that the name Christian is still an integral part of our school's ideals.

The campaign at TCU was short-lived, but students were willing to take time away from spring break planning to donate what items they could. These actions prove that we do not limit ourselves only to the troubles of daily living but take an interest in bettering the whole of mankind.

We urge you to donate before the suffering becomes unconquerable. A new food and clothing drive, which plans to deliver goods to the Little Heart Campground during the week between May graduation and the beginning of the summer semester, has now begun. If you cannot give material goods, give your time.

It may be the greatest thing you will ever do.

Dignity called for

Once again, I sit with my morning cup of coffee and the Daily Skiff. As sure as Frog Fountain won't be running, I can read the name-calling, lip-flapping and label-slinging so consistently seen on the Opinion page.

When will we grow up and start acting like adults? The editors and authors have the responsibility to express responsible letters and "opinions." I don't ask for censorship, merely discretion.

We can speak loudly and clearly for what we believe, but let's do it with some respect and dignity. Certainly, at some point, the attacks, counterattacks and defensive statements become counterproductive.

It could only get better

Who samples Marriott's food to determine its suitability for the TCU campus? Who actually sits down and plans our menus? I do not want to hear about some obscure group of testers very few people even know about. I want names!

I am really tired of hearing so many complaints about our food service and not seeing anything done about it.

When other problems have arisen in the past, committees have been formed to solve them. I am in favor of a committee to act as an intermediary between TCU students and Marriott. Surely improved communication would not make the food situation any worse; it is certainly worth a try.

Where extravagance reigns

As I walked into the Worth Hills cafeteria and glanced up at our carefully chosen menu for the evening, I noticed the outrageous items that it entailed, not to mention the even more outrageous prices. Some examples: $6.35 for a steak, $11 for lobster and salads that go for as low as $2.

I realize that our food is good, compared to other college campus food, but I feel that such extravagant items are not necessary for students on a food budget. I feel that there are two solutions to this evident problem: The food service can either lower their prices or serve less extravagant foods.

Goals turn soap peddler into tycoon

By John Cunniff

PLYMOUTH, Minn.(AP)—As usual, Curtis Carlson had his eye on the future.

"We've got to increase sales $300 million to $350 million a year," said the 69-year-old founder and sole owner of Carlson Companies, a conglomerate of more than 50 diversified but somewhat synergistic companies employing 30,000 workers.

The necessity was self-imposed. By almost any material measure, Carlson must be America's most successful goal-setter, having used that technique to help build from scratch one of the nation's largest companies.

He has no peer.

Who else in this century founded, nurtured, managed and still owns every share of stock in a concern whose sales are larger by far than most companies listed on the New York Stock Exchange, a company whose sales are still doubling every five years?

To grow at that rate is Carlson Companies' continuing goal. In 1978 sales were $1 billion. In 1982 they reached $2 billion. The new goal is $4 billion by 1987.

"This sort of thing keeps the mind active," said Carlson, whose collection includes companies in trading stamps, hotels, restaurants, sales incentives, travel, housing, catalog showrooms and jewelry, to name a few.

"To reach goals you must think-always." And, he said, you must innovate. "We," he said of Carlson Companies, the parent, "must think of new ways to build the skills we already have."

Behind his office in this suburban Minneapolis community construction was under way on an example of that innovation, the beginnings of the Carlson Center, a $300 million office-industrial complex with hotels and shops.

"If we set our sights to increase only as fast as the gross national product I think I'd call it a day," he said. "I'd let my son-in-law run the company or go public."

Curt Carlson was making $85 a month selling soap for Procter & Gamble back in 1938 when he and his wife, Arleen, founded Gold Bond Stamp Co. and he began writing goals on a slip of paper that he kept folded in his wallet.

As each goal was achieved he set new ones, and always communicated the goals to his employees. He managed, he says, to "squirrel away" capital to form or buy other enterprises. Always, he says, he was driven by goals.

"I was always taking chances 99 percent of public companies wouldn't have taken," he says. "I was always gambling. I never had gotten so excited with Procter & Gamble as with my own company."

Always, he set goals. "I had a tremendous desire to have that goal," he said. "It kept me on track." The spirit, he said, was picked up by employees. Now, he says, he sometimes has to reduce goals his executives set.

HANNIBAL, Mo. (AP)—When folks here decided to add their two cents to a fund-raising event, one thing just led to another and what they ended up with was more than six miles of pennies.

It took members of the Hannibal Early Bird Kiwanis Club and about 200 volunteers almost 12 hours to snake a 6.19-mile train of pennies in an attempt to set a new mark for the "Guinness Book of Records."

When they finished Saturday, 523,104 pennies covered the floor of the Hannibal Junior High School gymnasium. They were arranged in 333 rows spaced 2 inches apart.

Don Henderson, chairman of the Special People Penny Train Project, said it was to raise money for the local chapter of the Special Olympics.

Henderson said a Guinness penny train record of 374,300 coins was set by a Massachusetts high school last year. And now, affidavits from two certified judges, photographs and newspaper reports of the Hannibal event will be sent to Guinness.

Members of the Early Bird Kiwanis Club had been soliciting donations of pennies for the past two months. Additional cash donations boosted the amount raised for Special Olympics to more than $5,230, Henderson said.

Students exceed goal by $1,000

By Erin Young

They could have danced all night, and many did at the all-campus party to benefit the Tarrant County Epilepsy Foundation Thursday.

More than 600 TCU students attended the party sponsored by the Interfraternity Council, Panhellenic and the foundation.

Ann Landwehr, vice president of the foundation, said that more than $3,000 was raised by TCU, exceeding the original goal by $1,000. All of the money raised will go to help with programs for the more than 20,000 people in Tarrant County with seizure disorders.

"It was a great turnout," said Landwehr. "I spent all night Wednesday hoping that it would go over and that somebody would show up."

Free refreshments were provided by Budweiser and Coca-Cola. Volunteers from the board of directors of the foundation acted as hosts for the party.

While the board of directors kept the students supplied with food and drinks, the music was supplied by The Artists.

Door prizes were handed out at intervals during the evening. Several students received prizes ranging from free tuxedo rental to dinner and an evening for two at the Americana Hotel.

The winner of the ticket sales contest, which entitles the winning fraternity or sorority to a free party in the Budweiser Hospitality Room, has not yet been announced. "We probably won't have all of that compiled until Tuesday or Wednesday," said Troy Moore, IFC adviser.

Benefit dances like the one held Thursday are not unusual for the Epilepsy Foundation. Last year, the foundation sponsored a sock hop at Sundance Square in downtown Fort Worth. "The sock hop was successful," said Landwehr, "but since it was in July we weren't able to get the students involved."

Landwehr said that having the fund-raiser in the spring should gather together much more support for the foundation.

Kimberly Morgan, president of Panhellenic, said she felt the party was a great success. "I was really surprised at the turnout, and I think that everyone had a really great time."

Sophomore Cindy Esther said, "I think the benefit dance was a good idea. I think it would have gotten a lot more support, however, if it had been held the week before we all went on our spring break."

Both Moore and Morgan hope to see more projects like this one undertaken by TCU. Moore said, "I believe the party was really successful, and I'm hoping that we can consider it as a possibly annual event."

"It really promoted a positive image of the Greek system," said Morgan. "I think that TCU needs to get involved in more things like this since the response to this service project was so positive."

Winter reluctant to give up hold on nation

By The Associated Press

The fifth big wintry storm since the start of spring two weeks ago pummeled the nation from the Rockies to Kansas Monday with soggy snow that topped a foot in Utah and hail-bearing thunderstorms sweeping across Texas.

Highways in much of southern Wyoming, including large sections of Interstate 80, were closed periodically as swirling snow from the "very wet" system cut visibility to near zero.

In Colorado, where three Aspen ski patrolmen were killed while trying to set off a controlled snowslide over the weekend, winds gusting to 55 mph prompted an avalanche warning in Colorado's San Juan Mountains Monday.

To the south and east, 49 counties in the western half of Texas and a dozen in western Oklahoma were under severe thunderstorm warnings as the storm's cold front collided with warm air and moisture from the Gulf of Mexico.

Hail the size of golf balls pelted the eastern New Mexico town of Clovis late Sunday, and streams overflowed in southwest Kansas' Kearny and Scott counties as thunderstorms moved in and parked for several hours.

Twenty inches of snow piled up at Austin, Nev., over the weekend as the latest in a wave of Pacific-born storms began its assault on the eastern Rockies, from Wyoming to New Mexico.

Ranchers in Montana, Wyoming, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Kansas were warned to protect young livestock from high winds and chilly rain or snow.

"This storm is causing and will continue to cause quite a bit of havoc," said forecaster Bill Sammler, of the Severe Storms Center in Kansas City, Mo.

While the storm promised to be "a very wet one" as it surged slowly eastward, Sammler said it did not appear to be as dangerous as the killer system that marched over the country last week.

That storm claimed more than 80 lives as it spawned fierce thunderstorms along the Gulf Coast, a pack of tornadoes in the Carolinas and heavy snow along the northern East Coast.

For Colorado, spring has been little more than a repeat of winter. National Weather Service forecaster Keith Williams in Denver said the state has been swept by a new storm about every three days since spring began March 20.

UCAM 'die-in' breaks tradition

By Alan Gray
Staff writer of the TCU Daily Skiff

While TCU has a reputation as a conservative college, at least one student organization is attempting to go against tradition.

The TCU chapter of United Campuses Against Nuclear War staged a "die-in" in front of the Student Center that lasted from Friday night until the early hours of Saturday morning as a protest against nuclear war.

"We called it 'The Mourning After: A Statement of Survival Awareness,'" said UCAM spokesman Tomette Kirk.

"I know a lot of people don't care for what we stand for, and this is a radical thing to do," Kirk said. "People's minds can be changed... and things like this make people come up and ask 'What are you doing?' and that gives us the opportunity to tell them."

Twelve UCAM protesters began the "die-in" about 8 p.m. Throughout the evening protesters, heard "President Reagan" tell them about the deteriorating state of the world that would eventually lead to a "nuclear war."

The protesters set up cardboard boxes that were to serve as "fallout shelters" to protect them when the "bomb" hit. The boxes also served as shelter when the temperature dropped into the 40s and the winds became blustery.

Reagan was portrayed by freshman Todd Weiler, who gave the "updates" while doing a Reagan impersonation. "I'm just doing a portrayal of Ronald Reagan," said Weiler. "Other than that, I'm not taking an active role in the thing... I'm just acting the role out for them, I won't be out here all night."

Kirk said there were three reasons UCAM was holding the protest. "The first reason is education. We don't think anybody will survive a nuclear war, and we hope this will be educational."

"It's also a statement. I hesitate to say it's a demonstration, because it isn't your typical demonstration with signs and rallies, but it's our form of protesting the arms race."

"We're also out here just to have some fun together as a group," Kirk said.

"Usually people are pretty tolerant or don't care what we have to say," Kirk said. "Of course, though, we have people come up and either try to tell us a different view or try to start an argument."

Poor TCU defense helps Baylor

Sports

TCU DAILY SKIFF, Tuesday, April 3, 1984/5

By Peter Blackstock
Staff writer of the TCU Daily Skiff

More defensive problems. Not getting hits at the most opportune times, and, most of all, simply "not knowing how to win," said assistant baseball Coach Dave Schmotzer.

These three factors resulted in three TCU losses to Baylor on Friday and Saturday at the TCU diamond. Baylor downed the Frogs 9-3 in a single game on Friday, and the Bears then swept Saturday's doubleheader by scores of 9-7 and 2-1.

TCU now stands at 15-11 overall and 3-6 in the Southwest Conference. Though the team still has plenty of chances to improve its SWC record enough to earn one of the four berths in the conference tournament, the three toughest opponents—Texas, Rice and Arkansas—still lie ahead.

"The kids are trying," said Schmotzer, "but it comes down to knowing how to win, knowing how to put people away. We're not being outplayed, we just don't know how to win yet."

Friday's game, though seemingly a rout, was actually quite close. In fact, TCU actually out-hit the Bears 11-7 despite losing by six runs. However, Baylor pitcher Alan Koonce was able to scatter TCU's 11 hits over nine innings, while TCU committed four errors to help Baylor get the most out of its seven hits.

TCU took an early lead by scoring once in the first inning, but the Bears broke the game open in the top of the second with six runs—all unearned. Errors by third baseman Donnie Millender, first baseman Phil Houser and shortstop Brent Barker helped Baylor score six times despite getting just three hits.

A solo homer by Ronnie King increased Baylor's lead to 7-1 in the third inning. The Bears scored another run in the fourth behind a two-base error by outfielder Kenny Crafton.

Both teams scored once in the seventh (TCU on three hits, Baylor on none), and TCU scored once in the ninth to account for the 9-3 final score.

In Saturday's first game, Baylor again broke open the contest in the second inning. After scoring once in the first inning, the Bears added five more in the top of the second behind just two hits.

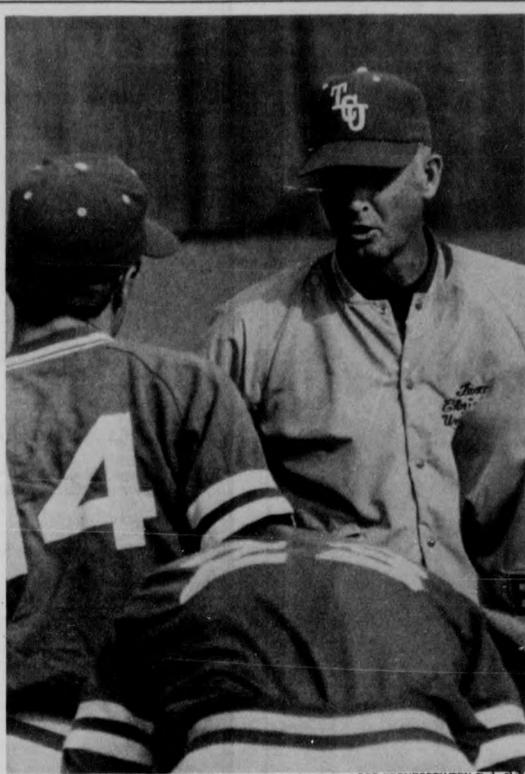

TCU closed the margin to two in the bottom half of the inning, scoring four runs. The Frogs took a 7-6 lead in the fifth, scoring two runs on an error by Baylor first baseman Keith Sheperd, but Baylor scored once in the sixth to tie the game.

The game then went into extra innings (it had originally been scheduled for seven). After a scoreless eighth, a single by Kenneth Patterson and consecutive doubles by Blair Hibbert and Mike Malinak gave Baylor a 9-7 win.

TCU stranded 10 runners during the game, including five at third base. "When we get runners out there, we don't drive them in," said TCU head Coach Bragg Stockton. "It's just frustrating right now."

Game two was more of a pitcher's duel. Mark Gold pitched a complete game for Baylor, while John Partridge went the distance after relieving Mickey Kazmierski with one out in the first inning.

Each team scored once in the first inning, but Malinak broke the tie in the fourth with a solo homer over the right field fence to give Baylor a 2-1.

USC women beat Tennessee for NCAA title

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Southern California and Tennessee worked hundreds of hours this season in an effort to reach the NCAA women's basketball championship game.

And when they got there on Sunday, it turned into a six-minute race to the title.

Southern Cal won the chase, rallying to defeat Tennessee 72-61 for its second straight championship before 5,365 fans at Pauley Pavilion.

"I think our experience took over at the six-minute mark and that was the turning point," said Southern Cal Coach Linda Sharp.

Underdog Tennessee led 28-26 at halftime and held a five-point advantage at 43-38 with 11:47 remaining when Southern Cal began its winning rally.

Southern Cal reserve guard Cynthia Cooper made an acrobatic scoop shot with 10:59 left that pulled the Trojans to within one point at 43-42. That seemed to ignite both the team and its fans.

Pam McGee's three-point play with 6:20 to go gave the Lady Trojans the lead for good and they steadily pulled away in the final minutes.

Pam and her twin sister, Paula, each scored 17 points to spark Southern Cal. Sophomore All-American Cheryl Miller, named the tournament's most valuable player, added 16 points for the fifth-ranked Lady Trojans, who finished with a 29-5 record.

Freshman point guard Amy Alkek scored 11 key points for USC, including seven in the final five minutes. Cooper, who had eight crucial points in Friday night's semifinal win over Louisiana Tech, added eight on Sunday.

SWC-leading Raiders smother lacrosse club

By Andrew M. Kinney
Staff writer of the TCU Daily Skiff

Still rusty from an actionless spring break, the TCU lacrosse team was red-raided by league-leading Texas Tech, Saturday in Lubbock. The 21-6 victory was Tech's second over TCU this season.

"We deserved to lose. We haven't had a good practice in two weeks, and when you're playing a team as good as Tech, you have to be well prepared. We weren't. We knew how hard we would have to work to beat Tech after we lost to them in February and we didn't," said player-coach Pat McGinley.

The Frogs were assessed nine penalties, seven of which resulted in Red Raider goals. "They are too good a team to put into man-up situations. The way their offense generates shots—it's suicide to commit dumb penalties," said defenseman Mike Gonzales.

Texas Tech's clockwork-like offense fired 42 shots at Frog goalie Chip Coulter. TCU's usually potent offense was held to a season low 15 shots. "They've got a great defensive slide. If I was able to get free from one defender, another guy would slide over and pick me up. As a result, I never really had a clear shot at the goal," said McGinley.

Tech attackman Bill Noturno led all scorers with six goals, equalling the entire offensive output of the Frogs. McGinley, Joe Scully and Guy Toothe each scored twice. The Frogs' six-goal total represents their most dismal offensive output of the 1984 campaign.

"When we played them (Longhorns) at Austin, they had a lot of fans out there harassing us. Naturally we would like to have as much fan support as possible at all our games, but we would really like to give UT the same treatment that they gave us down there," said McGinley.

The Frogs will travel to Waco Saturday for a game against a hapless Bear squad. The team will host the UT Longhorns at noon Sunday at Forest Park in Fort Worth.

The loss gives the second-place Frogs a 7-2 record in the Southwest Lacrosse Association and sets up an important date with the University of Texas, presently in third place.

"We were outplayed in every facet of the game. Our offensive unit wasn't working as well as usual, but the team as a whole was off," said defenseman Bill Doyle.

TCU soundly defeated the Longhorns 8-3 in their first meeting of the year.
