Researchers say cancer deaths declining

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time in at least 60 years, deaths from cancer are dropping steadily — a five-year trend that has led experts to declare true progress in the war on cancer.

"One of the most intractable diseases of the 20th century is now in decline," said Brad Rodu, who, with University of Alabama-Birmingham colleague Dr. Philip Cole, uncovered the trend.

The government validated the findings Wednesday, saying cancer mortality dropped 3 percent between 1990 and 1995. It's the first sustained drop since the 1930s.

Perry orders inquiry of training programs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary William Perry wants the Navy and Air Force to investigate their training programs for signs of sexual harassment.

Orders for the military-wide surveys were disclosed Wednesday amid a furor over reports of rape, sexual abuse and other improper activities at several Army bases between female trainees and their male instructors or commanders.

Perry spoke with Navy Secretary John Dalton and Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall in the past few days and ordered the reviews, a Pentagon spokesman said Wednesday.

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. George W. Bush is calling on lawmakers to give Texans a "billion dollar beginning" on promised school property tax relief.

Bush announced Wednesday that his budget proposal for the next two fiscal years will include a recommendation that $1 billion generated from higher-than-expected state revenues and lower-than-expected spending go to property tax relief.

The first phase of construction will encompass 800,000 square feet, employ over 800 people and be operational by 1999, said an Intel spokesperson.

Presidential run-off to be held today

The run-off election between Andy Mitchell and Stoney White for president of the House of Student Representatives will be held today.

The run-off is necessary because neither candidate received a majority of votes in Tuesday's election. Mitchell, a junior accounting and finance major, received 36 percent of votes cast. White, a junior political science major, received 29 percent.

Students can vote from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. in front of the Main or the Worth Hills cafeteria. A valid student ID is required.

Parking lot construction begins

By Ellena Fortner

Despite delays, construction will begin today on the parking lot behind the Moudy Building, one of the three parking lots currently under construction, said Will Stallworth, physical plant director.

J.L. Bertram, a construction company, was scheduled to begin bulldozing the parking lot Monday but was unable to secure the necessary subcontractors for the job, Stallworth said.

Construction on the parking lot began Aug. 26. The schedule calls for it to be complete Dec. 3, and no delays are expected, Stallworth said.

The only possible impediment would be weather problems, he said.

"We are in the middle of the rainy seasons," Stallworth said. "There reaches a point when it gets too wet and we are unable to lay down the pavement."

The parking lot next to Dan Rogers Hall is also close to completion and the stripes could be painted today, Stallworth said.

A drainage problem may force some of the parking spaces to be inaccessible at times until the problem can be corrected, he said.

"Not all the spaces can be open all the time because we have to fix the drainage problem and finish the landscaping," he said. "A large portion of them, though, will be open."

"We were also waiting to open the lot until the lightening fixtures were completed," he said. "The area is rather remote, and I think we would be criticized if we opened it with out lights and it was not safe."

Construction of the parking lot next to the Sid Richardson Building has not started yet because Stallworth said he is waiting for the other parking lots to be completed.

"There was lots of planning in the sequence in which we did these lots," he said. "We didn't want to dump 80 cars out onto the street at one time. We managed to have a net loss of about 30 spaces on campus at a time."

Last weekend, houses were torn down on the Sid Richardson lot and

Faculty Senate discusses tenure

By Kimberly Wilson
SKIFF STAFF

Tenured professors, post-tenure review and the probationary period for tenure-track professors were the topics discussed at the Faculty Senate meeting Wednesday afternoon.

Roger Pfaffenberger, a professor of decision sciences, began the discussion with arguments for and against professor tenure.

He said there is currently a greater emphasis on the importance of teaching during the tenure track than there is on research.

"We're beginning to see a movement to get away from tenure-track positions," he said.

Pfaffenberger said one of the major problems with tenure occurs when a large percentage of a university's faculty is tenured. At that point, he said, it's hard to change a department's focus and allow for flexibility in teaching.

"There are less tenure positions available so the uni-

Students promote GTE on campus

By Patricio Crooker

Technology, information, music and food were some of the main elements of Wednesday's on-campus special event promoting GTE.

For the 10-week project, a senior marketing seminar class consisting of 12 students worked with a total budget of $2,000 and other donations to conduct research and develop public relations, advertising and promotional materials for the GTE event.

The theme of the fair, "The future is now," attempted to show how GTE is approaching the fast-changing world of today's technology, the event's coordinators said.

Senior marketing major Kyle Sawai said the seminar is similar to an internship because GTE gave students a job-like opportunity to target an audience in a marketing campaign.

"What we basically wanted to find was students' perceptions on GTE and its services in general," Sawai said.

Sawai said the group did research on the company and designed the fair to represent the different areas in which GTE is involved.

Sculpture prof describes his life's work

Duhigg says trip to Europe at age 13 helped shape artistic inclinations

By Anne Drabicky
SKIFF STAFF

Thad Duhigg, a professor of sculpture, said Wednesday his sculpture is hard to describe.

He said his work is "a real tall order because there are visual language occurrences that words just can't touch."

In a lecture on his work titled "Sculpture: Remove Screws," Duhigg said one of the nicer aspects of sculpture is that, "You can show it, take it down and store it."

Each time works are taken apart, each time the screws are removed, the works reveal a new part of yourself, he said.

Duhigg said many factors influence his work.

"What does it mean?" That's a trick question," he said.

Duhigg said one of the greatest influences in his life was a trip he took to Greece and Switzerland when he was 13. Duhigg said the trip was special because he was able to explore ruins and sites on his own.

"At 13, I knew something significant had happened there," he said.

Another influential occurrence in Duhigg's life was when he decided to attend Southern Illinois University, he said. The first year he was in college, his works were based on line, geometry and biometric form.

He said the importance of materials cannot be underestimated.

"If you can imagine the object in chocolate, and then see it as it really is, you can see the importance of materials," he said.

One of his examples of this is a work called "Relic Wear."

Duhigg said, "I continually give myself a problem — deal with the horizontal, deal with the ground level."

He said his work got lighter when he moved to Wyoming in 1989 because the Wyoming terrain is a light color.

Duhigg said his life and his works changed in 1992 when he found out his wife was pregnant. He said at the same time, Patrick McCracken, director of the Amarillo Art Museum, asked Duhigg to do a large show for the museum.

He said prior to the birth of his daughter, Teghan, he didn't want to integrate himself with the environment.

"I had no wish to integrate with the environment," he said. "All of a sudden, I gave myself the permission to interact with the environment. I didn't have to dominate it or impose myself on it. She really kind of forced me to look at the natural world. Just her interest in it brought it back to me."

Duhigg's works are made of all steel stretched with fabric and then painted, usually, with oils and oil stains, though some are painted with acrylic.

He said the whole idea of materials, bronze and steel, as more permanent than canvas is central to the understanding of the works.

"I wasn't happy with the real smooth, reflective surfaces, so I changed and I'm much happier with it," he said.

Duhigg said he set himself up to deal with the problem of space

The Committee of 100 will recognize campus organizations for their support of TCU athletics at halftime Saturday during the TCU-Rice football game.

The Committee of 100 is an organization that raises money for TCU athletics.

Leanne Ivey, executive assistant for the committee, said the committee is asking each campus organization to have one member present at the event.

The members will accompany Roger Williams, the chairman of the Committee of 100, onto the field during halftime.

"This is the 100th anniversary of organized football for TCU and by the organizations participating in the event, it will show the great commitment that the student body has given over the past years," Ivey said.

She said the committee sent letters to the presidents of each organization asking for their participation.

She said there has not been an overwhelming response to the letters.

"We are thanking them for their support, so it would be nice for them to return the favor," Ivey said.

She said she hopes to get more responses by the end of the week.

"Let's just show how much spirit the student body has by having 100 percent participation by all of our organizations," she said.

The Committee of 100 will also

Selby said the halftime event is a good opportunity for students to show their support for TCU athletics. She said the organizations should join Williams on the football field to show their continuing support of the athletics. "It's a unique opportunity for all TCU organizations to get together for a common purpose," she said. Organizations that would like to participate in the event should call services, wireless Internet, cellular phones and pagers are some of the communication products featured during the event.

"Our target market was TCU students," Sawai said. "We were expecting 2,000 students to show up. I think we reached our goal."

Sawai said the event was the highlight of the class, and he thinks they were successful.

Barbara E. Cramer, GTE director of marketing and sales support in commercial markets, said she was pleased with the way the event was organized.

"It was very impressive how the students took this project," Cramer said. "For them to do complete research, all the promotion and put the presentation together in 10 weeks was amazing."

Cramer said she was impressed that the students were all undergraduates.

"They got all the donations and worked with such initiative and tenacity," she said.

Cramer said the students were extremely professional throughout the project.

Sara Johnson, a senior marketing major, said one of the main purposes of the fair was to inform students of GTE's Internet services.

"I think it was well-attended," she said. "Students interacted with GTE people, ate free food, listened to music and got a chance to win prizes."

Cramer said GTE wants to start and strengthen its relationship with TCU. She said this was not the first time GTE worked with TCU students.

"Last semester our marketing team did some special projects with (marketing faculty member) Becky Beasley," Cramer said.

Cramer said it is important for GTE to come to TCU because students are the leaders of the future, and the company should recognize this group.

Beasley said General Motors sponsored the senior marketing project two years ago when it was a national competition. She said the GM project was cancelled this year.

Beasley said Cramer offered GTE's help to continue the marketing project. Beasley said the help was beneficial for the class.

"Everybody wants to do it, but few companies actually want to put the money up," she said.

Beasley said the students did a great job in the promotion of the event.

Tommy Daniels, a disc jockey from 94.5 The Edge, played music at the event. The Fort Worth fire department's bomb squad and TCU's Superfrog were also present at the event.

Officials say Clinton will fight amendment

By Alan Fram
ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Concerned that remarks by President Clinton might help the prospects of the balanced-budget constitutional amendment, administration officials told reporters Wednesday that Clinton meant to emphasize that he will fight its likely approval by Congress.

On Tuesday, Clinton told reporters he believes the amendment is unnecessary, a position he has taken for years. But he added a condition, saying for the first time that he would consider one if it contained an "escape hatch" for recessions, when decreased business activity normally drives up federal deficits.

Awakening Wednesday to headlines and news broadcasts that Clinton had softened his position, administration officials began telephoning reporters, saying the president had not meant to flash a green light to the proposal. The calls represented an administration attempt to recast the story to their liking in hopes of retaining an outside chance of stopping the amendment, or at least forcing it to be changed.

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin told The Associated Press he and other economic advisers had asked Clinton Tuesday whether he had meant to backtrack on his previous opposition to the amendment.

"He said absolutely not, he was still opposed to the balanced budget amendment, and we should actively fight against it," Rubin said.

Rubin said Clinton told them that if it appeared the amendment would be approved, "we should try to get one that's the least harmful." But he also said Clinton has "grave doubts about whether you can create an escape hatch that is sufficiently flexible to take into account whatever may happen down the road" with the economy.

White House economic adviser Gene Sperling, who was also telephoning reporters, said administration officials wanted to make sure that reports of Clinton's remarks didn't encourage lawmakers to vote for the measure. He said the White House wanted legislators to know "we do plan to speak out as to why we think it's poor economic policy."

ADVISING ASSISTANCE

English department packet is a good first step

Advising once again has reared its ugly head for students and faculty members. The advising process brings with it frustration, confusion and most of all, distaste for many.

For the past couple of semesters, the Faculty Senate has worked with the House of Student Representatives on developing a better advising system that benefits both students and faculty members. Although these meetings have generated interesting discussion, that's about all they've produced.

Talk of further student questionnaires, research and committee meetings doesn't really do much to help the immediate problems of advising. But one department has taken upon itself to alleviate many of these problems.

The English department and especially Alan Shepard, director of undergraduate studies for the department, should be commended for the recent packet sent to all English majors and minors. The packet includes a letter from Shepard detailing recent comings and goings of faculty members and encouraging students to apply for an e-mail account to keep up with announcements of department events and news. There's even an e-mail account application enclosed so students don't have to trek over to Information Services.

Most importantly, the packet includes a detailed compilation of all English department undergraduate courses. Each course summary includes the name of the instructor, class times, texts used in the course, a concise summary of what the class will cover and requirements, including the number of tests and papers and how much each is worth.

The English department obviously did its part in orienting students to the department and its advising process. Now it's the students' duty to read the material and actively work on their schedules before knocking on a faculty member's door for advising.

Students have their problems with faulty advising, but faculty members also have their problems. Too many students show up for advising and want someone to plan their college years for them.

Ultimately, students are obligated to meet all the requirements and graduate in a timely manner. But if the university can take steps to make the process easier, as the English department has, students and faculty alike will be better off.

The Big Winners

Conservatives, their political ideology were dominant force in 1996 election

Political pundits have been convinced since they first reported Bill Clinton's re-election victory that they knew what voters were trying to say by sending a Democratic president and a Republican Congress back to Washington.

Surely, the punditry concludes, the voters want a government that works. They want bipartisanship. They want everyone to get along and be happy inside the Beltway. This election was a victory for the status quo, they say.

Wrong. This election was a complete victory, a total vindication, for conservative political beliefs.

Take the presidential election. Bill Clinton has been tacking steadily right ever since Republicans won Congress in 1994. Almost all his ideas — a balanced budget, tax cuts, welfare reform, cracking down on crime — are derivatives of conservative ideas.

Clinton's move to the right was so obvious, even members of the media noted he was stealing Republican ideas. One reason (among many) Bob Dole's campaign never caught fire is because Clinton stole all his thunder.

The battle for control of Congress further proves that conservatism has captured the nation's agenda. Despite enormous efforts to stop them, Republicans will control the House of Representatives for two consecutive terms for the first time in almost 70 years.

Since the very day after conservative ideas led to the 1994 Republican victory, liberals have been waging a campaign of deceit and distortion in an attempt to topple the GOP. Despite a huge war chest fueled by AFL-CIO donations designated to defeat Republicans, voters have returned Republicans to Congress.

Much of the attack focused on the 73 GOP first-termers elected in 1994. Tons of money was poured into campaigns against the freshmen, but very few lost. The reason is simple: These representatives were elected to balance the budget, reduce the size of the government, enact term limits and help restore morality and proper ethics to a troubled nation. Voters haven't rejected these ideas.

And there's not much chance Congress will be returned to liberal stewards any time soon. The GOP widened its margin in the Senate, and many seats once owned by moderates are now occupied by conservatives. For example, Sam Brownback, one of the hated freshmen from 1994, won Dole's old Senate seat in Kansas.

Overall, Congress has moved so much to the right that President Clinton admitted Tuesday that a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution would pass Congress and head to the states for possible ratification. How long can it be now before Clinton claims credit for the amendment?

Hark back to the claims Clinton made in his acceptance speech at the Democratic National Convention in August. He took credit for cutting the deficit, reforming welfare and overhauling the rules by which Congress operates, among other things. He deserves a little of the credit for the first example, but no credit at all for the second and third.

If the balanced budget amendment becomes law, would it be extraordinarily out of character for Clinton — when he's introducing Al Gore in 2000 perhaps — to say, "We pushed through an amendment to the Constitution that requires Washington to live within its means, just like the average American family"? I expect speechwriter royalties when he does.

To a certain extent, the pundits are right when they say Congress and the president will cooperate (at first, anyway). But that can be attributed more to Clinton, the Malleable Man, than to a great spirit of bipartisanship.

The U.S. political system is based on two parties for sensible reasons. These parties represent two vastly different philosophies: One supports government that "helps" people, by taking as much of their income as possible and dictating what they can and cannot do. The other supports limited government, letting citizens keep as much of their income as possible and allowing them to make their own decisions for themselves and their families.

The 1996 election proved beyond a shadow of a doubt which vision the American people support.

Skiff assistant editor and opinion editor Ryan J. Rusak is a junior news-editorial major from Benbrook.

COMMENTARY

RYAN J. RUSAK

Our inability to see gray areas causes curious problems

I've never been one to ask, "What's wrong with this world?" But after a few mind-numbing examples of stupidity I've read about recently, I'm beginning to wonder: What's wrong with this world?

Two months ago, a 6-year-old boy was suspended for sexual harassment. His crime? He kissed another 6-year-old on the cheek. If that's sexual harassment, I'd sure hate to see what playing doctor would be called.

Okay, it's no secret I'm a liberal, but this is going too far. Sexual harassment is using and displaying offensive words, pictures or gestures. Sexual harassment is touching someone in a crude and vulgar way without that person's consent. Sexual harassment is not an innocent kiss on the cheek from one 6-year-old to another.

He was not being vulgar; he was being playful. Moreover, he's 6! He does not have the cognitive ability to make a mature differentiation between an innocent kiss on the cheek (one like he does with his parents and siblings) and harassment.

The school later reversed its decision to suspend him but not until some serious publicity. But that's irrelevant. It was an idiotic decision in the first place. They shouldn't have stopped with the 6-year-old. Perhaps they could have banned Barney... you know, he sings about kissing.

The stupidity doesn't stop here, folks. Just a few weeks ago, an 11-year-old girl in South Carolina was arrested for bringing a knife to school. Good, right? Wait until you hear the story.

She took the knife to school so she could cut the chicken she brought for lunch. She went to her teacher to ask if it was okay if she used it. The knife was confiscated and she was arrested. The reason her school gave: That's how we handle children who bring weapons to school.

Turns out, Charlotte Kirk, the little girl in question, was helping her mother by making her own lunch. She packed the knife so she could cut the leftover chicken. There's more. She's a well-behaved honor student. In fact, she was allowed to finish her lunch without the knife — and she was unable to eat because her fork wouldn't cut it. She wouldn't eat the chicken with her hands because she was taught that was not polite.

Yeah, I bet in her spare time (before studying for calculus) she does a few drive-by-shootings. Better lock her up quick before she becomes a cop-killer.

How stupid can these school officials be? She was doing what she was supposed to do. She asked for permission. She made an honest mistake by bringing the knife to school and was not using it to harm anything (but a dead chicken). The school should have taken the knife away and told her not to do it again, maybe even called her parents, but not arrested her.

The stupidity continues in Cincinnati, where a police officer tackled, handcuffed and arrested a 62-year-old woman for putting coins in expired parking meters. It seems that's against the law in good ol' Cincinnati.

Can't a good deed go unpunished? She was trying to help those people out. There is no reason she should have been treated so rudely by Cincinnati's "finest." They almost give the Gestapo a good name.

All these incidents of stupidity lead me to a point. They underscore an overall problem I perceive in American society: We can't see the gray area. Things are not black and white. Not all crimes should be treated equally.

I see it time and time again. "The Constitution doesn't say it so we can't do it," "All people on welfare are lazy," "Less government is always good." It's the death of common sense.

To some extent, we are to blame. Polls show people want law and order, courts that follow the law, schools that crack down on discipline, government that balances its budget (even though citizens don't — ever heard of loans, credit cards, debt?).

Stupid incidents like these are not going to end until the majority of us stop seeing everything in simple, dichotomous terms.

Perhaps we don't need to balance the budget more than we need to secure a healthier, more educated and more equal society. Maybe schools don't need to work on discipline as much as thinking skills. Perhaps laws aren't always clear (or just) and need to be interpreted.

In each of these incidents, officials responded in a rigid manner, without allowing for the mitigating circumstances. But isn't that what we told them we expect?
