Friday runoff to decide three SGA offices

By Tealy Dippel
STAFF REPORTER

Two uncontested positions were filled after election polls closed Wednesday while candidates for three other officer positions will compete in runoffs Friday.

Voters elected Meredith Killgore as vice president for Programming Council and Stine Lunden for Student Government Association treasurer while the positions of student body president, House vice president and House secretary remain undecided.

Ben Jenkins, a junior international finance major, who garnered 881 votes (47 percent), and Walker Moody, a junior psychology and Spanish major, who received 672 votes (36 percent), will face each other in a runoff for SGA president Friday.

The runoff for House vice president will be between Sara Donaldson, a sophomore premed/neuroscience major with 651 votes (35 percent), and Kenny Oubre, a junior economics major with 623 votes (33 percent).

For House secretary, Ben Rebstock, a sophomore radio-TV-film major, with 832 votes (44 percent), and Kyle Turner, a sophomore premajor, with 563 votes (30 percent), will compete in Friday's race.

Nearly 1,900 students cast their vote, a 63 percent increase over voter turnout last year. This year's number of votes surpassed last year's figure of 1,178 at 4 p.m. Wednesday. There were 83 students who showed their TCU ID's and opted to vote by paper by placing their votes in an envelope at the Information Desk.

"We passed the number of votes received last year; who knows we might be going for an all-time record," SGA President Ben Alexander said.

Jenkins said he is happy with the number of people who voted.

"It makes me feel people believe in my campaign, and what I want to do for the student body and SGA," Jenkins said.

Moody could not be reached for comment.

Students seek ban against travel company

Holiday Express says company not at fault for botched vacation

By Tealy Dippel
STAFF REPORTER

Each year Holiday Express displays its posters offering group trips to places such as Acapulco and Cancun, but after about 15 years of service at TCU, some students said they want the company's privilege to advertise on campus taken away.

More than 100 students from TCU and other regional universities signed up in March 1999 for a spring break package that included a five-day, four-night stay in Cancun. Instead of spending the first day on the beach, students said they spent the first full day of their trip at the Dallas/Fort Worth International Airport.

Sara Donaldson, a sophomore premed/neuroscience major, said she and other students spent about 30 hours waiting at the D/FW airport because Dwey Estelle, a sales and marketing representative from Holiday Express, repeatedly told them their flight had been delayed. "Each hour there was a new story on why our plane was late," Donaldson said. "Part of the time there was no representative around, so we were basically stranded in the airport."

Stuart Schultz, a senior finance major, said the company's representative was not helpful, and the situation at the airport could have run more smoothly.

"Finally the (American Management Resources) lady at the airport took charge and got everyone in order," Schultz said.

Mike Hays, president and owner of Holiday Express, said students were only at the airport for 27 hours. A representative from the company was at the airport the entire time, he said, making Holiday Express one of the only spring break companies in Texas that has a representative at the airport for spring break trips.

Hays said his company is not at fault because they don't fly the aircrafts used for their trips. He said it is unfortunate the flight was late, but the airline business is a fiasco.

"When a plane is late, we all lose," Hays said.

Students, however, did sign the company's Charter Participate Agreement, stating Holiday Express is responsible to the participant for making arrangements for all tour services but is not responsible for delays or changes in air transportation.

Donaldson said she thinks Holiday Express is at fault because it was not a delayed flight, it was fraud.

"I went with an airline official to check on the flight number and time, and there was no scheduled flight out of D/FW to Cancun that day," she said.

Donaldson said Estelle was no help to students because he kept calling himself "the little guy" because he was just there to check people in and get students on the plane.

Donaldson said she told Estelle she was upset, and he responded that initially the fault was with his company. Donaldson said she then

Senate to discuss topic TBA at annual Faculty Assembly

The TCU Faculty Senate will hear updates from its committees when it meets at 3:30 p.m. today in the Sid W. Richardson Building boardroom.

Roger Pfaffenberger, chairman of the Faculty Senate, said ideas for the annual Faculty Assembly will be heard and debated. Pfaffenberger said he hopes to have one or more topics chosen during the meeting.

Pfaffenberger said he has received suggestions about the administrative structure, faculty salary, the university curriculum requirement, the possibility of an honors college and distance learning.

"Every fall, the Faculty Senate must call faculty members together and talk about an issue of some importance," Pfaffenberger said. "What I want to do is have a topic chosen (Thursday)."

Inversion of salaries, which would allow new assistant professors to be hired at salaries higher than those of full professors, will be an important topic, Pfaffenberger said.

The Academic Affairs, Faculty Governance, Student Relations, Promotion and Tenure, Grievance and Budget and Finance committees will issue reports.

Religious exchange designed for all faiths

Group struggles with attendance at discussions

By Steven Baker
STAFF REPORTER

Although Thursday evening's ecumenical exchange is designed to start conversation between students of different faiths, some said people don't care enough to show up.

Phil Padgett, a senior psychology major, said the idea is good because so many people at TCU are concerned with their own religion, but most will not attend.

"I think the only people that are going to go are religion majors, or maybe certain people that have been frustrated with religion at TCU," he said.

All students are invited to the free ecumenical exchange, "Peace in the Global Village," at 5:30 p.m. Thursday in Reed Hall's Faculty Center Lounge. A panel of speakers composed of TCU professors and one representative from Goodwill Industries of Fort Worth, Bernard Kern, will discuss the different aspects of faith and peace in the global community between religious faiths and denominations. Students will have a chance to pose questions to the panel after its discussion.

Kevin Libick, faith education task force chairman for Uniting Campus Ministries, said the primary purpose of the meeting is to discuss peace, but people need to come simply so they can talk with one another.

"There is not real communication between different denominations and faiths," he said. "All those organizations are trying to grab students' attention. They are not working to build a strong community for TCU students. If they work together, they can probably help the campus a lot more."

The meeting is sponsored by UCM and TCU Peace Action, and free food and drinks will be available for students who attend.

UCM President Kelly Connelly said communication between different faiths and denominations does not happen enough on campus.

"UCM is probably the only Christian organization that communicates with non-Christian organizations," she said. "Some Christian organizations don't find it important to have a relationship with non-Christian organizations. It is a difficult situation."

Wyatt Harris, a freshman music education major, said although most students may not be interested, it would help them to attend.

"I totally agree with the ecumeni-

New program tries to nudge students out of comfort zones

By Jessica Schambach
STAFF REPORTER

As two students argued about the Main X-Change Wednesday, one got up to prove his point. He casually ventured out of his realm of friends and into an unfamiliar domain, where he quickly began chatting among people of both different and similar interests.

The Main X-Change — sponsored by the Campus Communications Committee, a recently created committee to advance communication in the TCU community — is an effort to motivate students to move outside their group of friends and associate with others in their immediate surroundings, beginning in The Main.

"There is a lot of student concern that there's a lack of community at TCU and that at The Main, specifically, it's very cliquish," said Mandy Mahan, CCC chairwoman. "People say they are tired of this, but whether they are willing to act on it, well, we'll find out. I'm giving them the opportunity."

Mahan said there was no obvious change in The Main due to the program.

"(There was) no drastic change from how it usually is, but I didn't expect a drastic change the first time," she said. "A lot of people said they thought it was a good idea, but it will take some time for them to get used to it. If it's around long enough, people will get more comfortable with the idea."

Tamara Taylor, a junior business management major, said she participated in the Main X-Change and met three students.

"It gets people to interact with other people that they wouldn't normally interact with," she said.

Kaliah Sami, a junior elementary education major, said the event is a good way to meet people in similar work regardless of the amount of advertising.

"I just don't think it's a concept that will ever work," he said. "Having a meal with someone that you don't even know is pretty awkward."

Some people are reclusive and don't talk to anyone other than their friends, said John Turtine, a sophomore premajor.

"I think the mingle program is a good idea because there are too many cliques," he said. "If you're mingling, you meet some more people and experience college."

Wave of ethnic violence against Serbs could put off donors for reconstruction, group says

PRISTINA, Yugoslavia — The international organization charged with rebuilding civilian life in Kosovo warned Wednesday that the wave of ethnic violence against Serbs and other minorities in the province could dissuade potential donors from funding reconstruction.

"The population of Kosovo and their leaders must understand that this violence jeopardizes the international reputation and the standing of Kosovo," said a statement by the 54-nation Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe. "It's likely to affect donors' sympathy and support at a time when important donor meetings are coming up."

The OSCE is responsible for helping to restore aspects of daily life in Kosovo, from training the new multiethnic police corps to assisting in the running of municipal administrations.

Violence has persisted in Kosovo despite the presence of the international peacekeeping force which arrived in June after Yugoslav President Slobodan Milosevic pulled his troops out to stop NATO's 78-day bombing campaign.

The OSCE statement also said, "The international community did intervene in Kosovo to protect human rights and not to pave the way for a new wave of ethnic harassment and violence."

William Walker, the U.S. diplomat who headed the European monitoring mission in Kosovo that tried to keep a lid on tensions before the NATO bombing began, also condemned anti-Serb attacks on Tuesday.

Flooding kills hundreds including rescuers in Vietnam; death toll expected to increase

HANOI, Vietnam — Torrential downpours have devastated central Vietnam, causing floods that have killed hundreds of people, the head of a government delegation to the afflicted areas said Wednesday.

The death toll was expected to increase as reports trickled in from areas where phone lines were down. Rain was still falling in inundated areas.

Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development Le Huy Ngo, head of a mission dispatched to the area by Prime Minister Phan Van Khai, said in an interview with Vietnam Television that the death toll was in the "hundreds." He did not give an exact figure.

Nguyen Van Me, governor of Thua Thien Hue province, said in a live telephone interview with VTV that 48 people had died in his province, including three rescuers from the Border Guard.

He said many people have been sitting on the roofs of their houses for two days waiting for food. Four helicopters dispatched by the government could not reach the province.

Ngo said rescue operations are very difficult because of continuing bad weather.

Heavy rains have dumped up to two feet of rain on the flood-prone region over the past week. The storms are expected to continue the rest of the week, the central weather forecasting station said.

Vast swaths of farmland and hundreds of thousands of homes were submerged in one of the country's poorest regions. North-south transport by road and rail was paralyzed.

Time running out for House to reach agreement about raising minimum wage

WASHINGTON — Sponsors of House measures to boost the minimum wage by $1 an hour are running out of time to reach agreement on how quickly the increase would take effect and the scope of a companion tax relief package.

Republican and Democratic sponsors of competing plans worked Tuesday to line up the necessary votes, but Majority Leader Dick Armey said the issue would not reach the House floor unless a GOP-tilted version with $30 billion in tax relief over five years appeared likely to gain sufficient bipartisan support.

After a closed-door Republican meeting Wednesday, several GOP leaders said it was unlikely the necessary 40 to 50 Democratic votes would be found in time for action this week.

The measure, sponsored by Reps. Rick Lazio, R-N.Y., and Gary Condit, D-Calif., has not only drawn a veto threat from the Clinton administration over the tax package but is also viewed by many GOP moderates as weak because the minimum wage increase is phased in over three years.

Long a hallmark of Democratic politics, increasing the current $5.15-an-hour minimum wage has become a priority for Republicans in districts with large union constituencies, particularly in the Northeast. For that reason, House GOP leaders are willing to bring an increase to the floor, but they aren't actively supporting it.

Focus of war on drugs should change to end need for drugs, group says

WASHINGTON — The U.S.-led military-style war on drugs is a failure and should be changed to focus more on ending the demand for drugs and drug money, a group of prominent Americans and Latin Americans said Wednesday.

The 13 signers of the letter included jurists, doctors, artists, religious leaders and three former Latin presidents — Belisario Betancur of Colombia, Violeta Chamorro of Nicaragua and Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Oscar Arias of Costa Rica.

The signers urged officials attending Oct. 28 and 29 drug conference to consider policies that will focus more on reducing consumption, expanding drug treatment programs, and promoting economic development to decrease the reliance on drug income among people who produce it.

Rare dengue disease infects 30 Texans in largest outbreak since 1995

AUSTIN — Thirty Texans have contracted dengue fever since July, according to health officials.

The latest figures from the Texas Department of Health show that Webb County had 22 cases since July 1, followed by Hidalgo and Willacy with two each. Nueces, Galveston, Tarrant and Travis counties each had one case.

Twenty-two cases were travel-related and six were acquired in Texas. It was undetermined how the remaining cases were contracted.

It's the state's largest outbreak since 1995, when 29 people caught the disease, seven acquired in the state.

Dengue symptoms include high fever, severe headaches, joint and muscle pain and nausea. The disease usually lasts about two weeks and is rarely fatal. There is no vaccine or cure for dengue.

Texas is the only state that has reported locally acquired cases of the virus in the last 50 years.

Halloween essay about killing teacher, students lands 13-year-old in jail for five days

PONDER, Texas — Thirteen-year-old Christopher Beamon's scary Halloween essay earned him extra credit and five days in jail.

The seventh-grader, arrested last week for writing a story about shooting two classmates and a teacher, was released from juvenile detention Tuesday.

The student said his class was assigned by teacher Amanda Henry to write a horror story about being home alone and hearing noises. The teacher gave Christopher extra-credit points for volunteering to read his in class.

The boy was picked up at school by deputies last Thursday after a call from Ponder High School officials. Parents had complained about the essay, written in the first person with several misspellings, that included a passage in which he became angry and "accidentally shot Mrs. Henry."

He wrote that he "thought it was a crook so I busted out with a 12 gauge and Ismael busted out with 9 mm and we step off the porch and this bloody body dropped down in front of us and scared us half to death."

Chris' essay mentions a shotgun, a handgun, different kinds of drug paraphernalia, and the shooting of two students and his teacher.

Christopher's mother, Jan Beamon, said she met with an assistant principal that morning and had no idea her son would be treated as a criminal.

These stories are from The Associated Press.

PRIMARY VOICE

Turnout at elections commendable

Student Government Association elections were held Wednesday in a first-time 24-hour online election, and the student body responded — in a way that has unsurpassed other elections in recent memory.

Nearly 1,900 voters cast their electronic ballot in the primary election, topping last year's election turnout of 1,178 by 63 percent. The races rallied about 25 percent of the student body to the polls.

"I am impressed and amazed," SGA President Ben Alexander said. "The student body has responded."

Student voters elected Meredith Killgore for vice president for Programming Council and Stine Lunden for SGA treasurer, who were the lone candidates for the positions. A run-off election between the candidates for SGA president, House vice president and secretary will determine who will join Killgore and Lunden on the SGA Executive Board for next year.

Although many still missed Wednesday's election, turnout was impressive. Students have spoken and proven that there are more than a few who care about their student government. Perhaps these results help to chip away the perception that TCU students are apathetic and help to show that we are a group of students who are concerned about our leadership for the future.

Some had their doubts about online voting, but the accessibility even allowed for participation across the country and around the world. Alexander said votes were received from students in study programs at the Biosphere II in Tucson, Ariz., Washington D.C. and London.

Today, however, was just the start. Friday's run-off elections will decide the results of the three student government offices, all close races based on Wednesday's election. Your voice is more important than ever.

If you missed Wednesday's election, follow the example of the 25 percent who participated Wednesday and let your voice be heard Friday.

'About you' not all about athletes

Registration for closed classes should not be limited to those in sports

Closed classes can be the most annoying part of registration. Most students have faced the closed-class dilemma at some point in their college careers. We either bite the bullet and postpone a class until a n o t h e r semester or sign up for something else.

Athletes, because of their demanding schedules, are given priority during registration. Because of set practice times, they have a limited time frame in which they can go to class.

It is understandable that the university would offer assistance to these students who have certain needs. But athletes are not the only ones who need special consideration.

Students in the 3/2 MBA program must complete their undergraduate work before the end of their junior year. One closed class can spell big trouble, especially in a department with limited course selections.

There are also students, believe it or not, who work full-time to pay their way through school. Along with studying, group projects, sleeping and sanity, they must also manage a 40-hour work-week.

If the university gives special consideration to athletes who have time constraints, it should also assist those students who have other legitimate reasons for needing specific classes.

TCU has improved advising and registration with FrogNet. With online registration, students and faculty no longer have to deal with finding lost paperwork and scheduling advising appointments. In addition, students can choose not to see their adviser at all. Instead of being viewed as the fall guy when a student makes a poor scheduling choice, faculty can take on more of mentor's role. It's the student's responsibility to make sure they are taking the right classes.

These improvements will make the registration process easier for most students. But TCU should offer help for students on strict course plans who may face serious scheduling problems if classes they need are closed.

Special measures should not be taken for just anyone who wants to get in a class that has closed. But students who do need classes during a certain semester should be able to get them. TCU should not work against students who face special academic circumstances simply because they are not athletes.

And students who know they would be in dire straits if a class closes shouldn't expect a special favor from the Registrar's Office at the last minute. Instead, students should plan ahead. If the university is willing to grant priority registration, students should notify the Registrar's Office before advising and registration begins.

If TCU is "about you" during the admission process, it should be "about you" during registration. What we experience from one semester to the next determines whether we stay or leave TCU. All students with special circumstances deserve help.

Playing it safe won't help Bush win

Candidate should take a position on real issues, not on common sense moral topics

The headline in Wednesday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram said it all: "Bush advocates morality in schools."

Gee, thanks, G-Dub. In a speech to the Mountain Chamber of George W. Bush said Tuesday that if he were president, he would make moral values and discipline as important as reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic. Well isn't that special?

As the GOP frontrunner for the 2000 nomination, this is the perfect time for him to stress the importance of morals and discipline. What better time for Bush to gain a few votes from those who are convinced that the good ol' days of respecting and obeying public school teachers are long gone?

There's no doubt that levels of respect in schools have gone from slim to slimmer. Many kids don't learn those lessons at home, so it's logical that these lessons should be taught in schools.

The Star-Telegram reported that Bush called for tripling the annual federal investment in "character education" programs from $8 million to about $25 million. These lessons, the Star-Telegram reported, would train teachers to incorporate lessons in virtues into the school curriculum.

This might make Bush's campaign seem that much more attractive to voters uncon-vinced of his political prowess, but his endorsement of morality in the classroom earns more questions than votes.

Whose morals will this curriculum be based on? Will stuffed-shirt school board members write the "morals" for students in their districts, or will a politically correct group of four Hispanic women, three white men, two black women and a partridge in a pear tree decide which morals to teach?

Our nation can't even agree on sex-education programs. While school board leaders and politicians debate the best way to teach students about sex, children are having children. Children are getting diseases. Children are dying, and these leaders can't decide whether or not teachers should say "condom" in classes.

But does Bush have to speak out for morality in the classroom? As a product of the public school system, I know classrooms need help. And that's probably something that most other people know, too.

It's great that Bush supports building character in the school system. But this is a topic that goes without saying, and it deserves more than campaign promises to score votes and a party nomination.

Maybe before he goes about advocating Morality 101 (as if anyone would not support morals and discipline), Bush should speak about his views on other issues that not everyone agrees on. Campaigning is not about stating the obvious.

LETTERS to the editor

Abstinence is self-control and learning appreciation of sexuality

We feel that we must respond to the incredible opinions voiced in "Dangerous Sex Education" (published Oct. 28).

SheriAnn Spicer alleges that "these programs ... use numerous scare tactics to convince teenagers that sex is a bad thing that somehow becomes OK only after marriage."

Chastity is about developing self-control, the ability to control the attraction and not get like animals. We don't "preach" that sex is terrible at all. This movement of sex education is attempting to teach teenagers to appreciate the gift of sexuality. We know from personal experience in dealing with teenagers that 80 percent wish they had waited until marriage.

As far as methods of protection, let us talk about so-called "protection." The traditional protection most prevalent in society is the condom. Made out of latex, this material is not completely solid because it has microscopic holes. These holes can be up to five microns wide, small enough to prevent a pregnancy (if it doesn't break, and they are not known for their durability), but much larger than most viruses.

The HIV/AIDS virus is only one-tenth of one micron in size and according to the American Medical Association journal, condoms were reported to have a 30 percent failure rate in preventing the transmission of AIDS. We are dealing with life and death here ... nobody wants their brakes to work 70 percent of the time!

Besides that, think about saving yourself for that special night. After committing yourself to the one person, you are going to be with for the rest of your life, THEN give yourself totally to that person. It is a gift that means something very special when it has not been given to everyone else.

Mahan said Wednesday's event was an experiment to find out students' responses.

She said it will occur next week, and if it is a success, it could become a weekly event. Extra activities to help students meet new people are being planned for Wednesday, she said.

Mahan said she hopes the Main X-Change will encourage people to step outside their comfort zones and experience something new.

"If there's one person that's affected by it, then I think it's worth every minute I put into it," she said. "People should feel comfortable and have an environment that feels comfortable for them to meet new people. Up until right now, it hasn't been that way."

cal exchange, but I probably won't take part in it because of my other activities," he said.

Connelly, a ballet and modern dance major, said the acceptance of people of different faiths is one of the reasons to have events like the ecumenical exchange.

"This is an opportunity for students to increase their knowledge outside the classroom, verbalize their opinions but also to listen to others," she said. "Hopefully, it facilitates discussions between people with alternate views and backgrounds."

Cadet discovers future during overseas experience

By Matt Weinack
STAFF REPORTER

As Ed Hale stood to watch the sunrise from Mount Fuji's 6,000-foot peak, he realized where he wanted to spend his career as an Air Force officer.

"It was really an eye-opening experience," Hale said. "It was a fast way to break the bubble because I have to make a decision in the next nine months."

Hale, a senior management major, spent three weeks this past summer at Yokota Air Base in Japan for Operation Air Force Overseas, an internship program for Air Force ROTC cadets.

Spending time in Japan has made his decision clearer, Hale said.

"(Japan) is definitely some place I would like to go back to," Hale said. "I would like to be stationed overseas."

During his stay, Hale had the opportunity to see Tokyo at night from a helicopter.

"It's hard to prepare for the magnitude of seeing city everywhere you look," Hale said. "There's almost no green ground. It's kind of wild."

Hale saw his first sunrise after a night of climbing Mount Fuji in freezing weather.

"We tried to find cover to sleep, but we kept shivering so badly that we woke everybody up," Hale said. "It was very peaceful and very quiet. Everybody stopped talking and turned their focus on the sun. It was beautiful."

Hale spent one week learning about all of the different levels of command at the 374th Air Lift Wing in Japan. The rest of his time overseas was spent with the 374th Security Forces Squadron, the police force on the base.

"It definitely got me excited about being an Air Force officer," Hale said. "It made me appreciate being in ROTC and everything you put up with in and experience something new.

When he entered AFROTC, Hale said he wanted to be a pilot, but he had to change his plans because of bad eyesight. Hale said he wants to work in security forces, specifically in the office of special investigations, which is the military equivalent of the FBI.

"I wanted to do something on the front lines and be proactive," Hale said. "I want to protect those that protect the country."

The security forces act as the police on base, and they conduct investigations into fraud and terrorism. During wartime, the security forces act as the Air Force infantry.

Capt. Randy Robinson, Hale's instructor this semester, said Hale benefited from his summer experience.

"This experience will help him a lot because he knows what to expect from his potential job," Robinson said. "I think he will make an excellent officer. I think he's open to doing anything in the Air Force."

Lt. Col. Michael Withers agreed, saying Hale has the determination to make a good Air Force officer.

"I have no doubt he will do great," Withers said. "He's enthusiastic, and he's motivated. He's very willing to take on challenges."

Hale is AFROTC's inspector general this semester, a job that is thankless, and one that is not sought after by many people, Withers said.

Inspector generals evaluate all of the programs in ROTC to find ways to make them more efficient and beneficial for cadets. They also act as complaint officers and investigate problems that arise between personnel within ROTC.

challenged him to sign his name on her meal voucher to prove what he said.

"He signed the back of my meal voucher underneath the words 'I guess initially the fault is with us,'" Donaldson said.

Donaldson said she drafted a contract stating that because of poor planning, she would receive a full refund of $487.95. Donaldson said Estelle and a witness signed the contract.

But Hays said Estelle does not recall signing the piece of paper.

"They put us through hell," Donaldson said. "Any company with integrity would give all of us a full refund."

Hays said Holiday Express contracted with Global Airlines Services, an airline broker, to charter the aircraft used for the spring break trip to Cancun. Hays said PanAm was the airline used, and they have hired an attorney to proceed with a federal court process because of the flight delays.

Hays said it is AMR, a travel company conglomerate, that takes care of the chartered flights because AMR takes care of the bags and posting flight times. Hays said his company is not at fault for airline delays, and Donaldson is mistaken.

"I was young once and, no offense, but having chartered flights up in lights in the airport is just not the case," he said.

Donaldson said students were given meal vouchers at the airport, and, later that night, they were given hotel rooms for the evening. "We did not leave for Cancun until 10:30 a.m. the next day," Donaldson said.

Donaldson said she and other students missed one day and one night of their trip, and she believes Holiday Express kept the money.

Wes Warnock, a senior broadcast journalism major, said he is demanding a refund from Holiday Express and has already sent the company a certified letter. Warnock said once he and the other students arrived in Cancun, they didn't trust the company.

"The way we were treated is the worst part about it," Warnock said. "No customer should be treated like that."

Hays said he wanted to send a voucher to the students involved, but his attorney, Cheryl Smith, advised against it.

"My attorney said it may hinder the proceedings against PanAm," he said.

Diana Barthel, a complaint coordinator at the Better Business Bureau in Fort Worth, said a folder on Holiday Express was originally established in July 1997, but there is no report prepared on the company.

"There have been three complaints on Holiday Express in a three-year period, two complaints have been resolved, and one has not," Barthel said.

Barthel said the three complaints included customer service, agreement on service and delivery of service.

Donaldson said she doesn't want to see Holiday Express flyers on campus anymore.

"I don't want others to fall for the trap that we did," Donaldson said.

Mike Russel, associate dean of campus life, said he thinks some companies have legitimate programs, and others don't because starting up a business is fairly easy to do.

"Maybe there should be some kind of student education on companies," Russel said. "The more communication there is, the better consumers we become because we are not just falling for an offer that seems too good to be true."

Moody could not be reached for comment.

Donaldson said she will emphasize her participation in leadership in House before Friday's runoff.

"I need to make sure people know I'm part of House, I've never left House and I'll stay part of House," Donaldson said.

Oubre said he is excited about the runoff.

"In the next two days I am going to prove I have the necessary House experience coupled with the necessary outside experience needed to show that I am the overall best candidate for vice president," Oubre said.

Candidates will be able to spend an additional $50 on their campaigns between now and Friday.

Voting procedures will remain the same for the runoffs when voting polls will be open from 12:01 a.m. to 11:59 p.m. Friday. For those who are unable to vote online, the Information Desk in the Student Center will be staffed from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Friday.

Cross country runner dedicates season to loss of close friend

By Steven Baker
STAFF REPORTER

During the North Texas Cross Country meet in October, senior runner Jared Pope was breathing harder than usual. His legs were aching, and he had to find something to help him make it to the finish line.

Then he remembered his lifelong friend Brady Garrett Brown and finished the race with his best time ever. "I felt like something was carrying me," Pope said. "If it was angels or whatever, I just didn't know. But then I felt like I could keep running stronger."

Brady, 17, died July 30 in a car crash in Granbury. In a conversation a week before the accident, Brady told Pope to go out and have his best season ever in cross country. So, after Brady's death, Pope decided he would dedicate his season to Brady.

Texas Tech suspends outside linebacker after drug charge

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Texas Tech coach Spike Dykes suspended outside linebacker Dorian Pitts indefinitely Wednesday after the player turned himself in to Lubbock County authorities on a drug charge.

Pitts, a junior from Lubbock Monterey, is accused of delivering between a quarter of an ounce to five pounds of marijuana, which is a felony. If convicted, he could face 180 days to two years in jail and a fine up to $10,000.

Pitts was free Wednesday night on a $5,000 bond.

The suspension marks the second time this week that a Texas Tech player has left the team because of a drug arrest.

On Monday, defensive back Derrick Briggs was arrested on suspicion of possessing marijuana in a drug-free zone. Briggs also was suspended indefinitely.

Pitts had 34 tackles while playing in all eight games for the Red Raiders this season. Two weeks ago, Pitts blocked his second punt of the season to help ice Tech's 35-7 victory over Baylor.

Dykes announced that he'd suspended Pitts Wednesday for violating team policy, but would give no more details.

Forward leaves Mavs in apparent contract dispute

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks reserve forward Kebu Stewart has left the team in an apparent contract dispute.

Stewart, who signed with the Mavericks last month after starring in the Continental Basketball Association last season, attended Dallas' morning shootaround Tuesday but never arrived for the team's season opening 108-96 victory over Golden State.

Mavericks spokeswoman Karen McElhane said Wednesday that Stewart had returned to his home in Bakersfield, Calif. Team officials spent part of the day discussing the terms of Stewart's contract with his agent, Scott Boatman, Ms. McElhane said.

Stewart, a 6-foot-8 power forward, was drafted by the Philadelphia 76ers in 1997 after a college career with Cal-State Bakersfield. He averaged 18.9 points and 12.3 rebounds for the CBA's Sioux Falls Skyforce last year.

Tests show Aikman OK to play in Minn. game

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Dallas Cowboys quarterback Troy Aikman was cleared to play Wednesday after an MRI showed he suffered no damage from a blow to the head.

Cowboys officials said the results of Tuesday's precautionary MRI show Aikman did not have a concussion and that he will be able to play in Dallas' Monday night game at Minnesota.

Indianapolis cornerback Jeff Burris rammed his helmet into Aikman's on a sack early in the fourth quarter of the Colts' 32-24 victory on Sunday. Aikman sat out one series, sniffed some smelling salts, then returned.

Horned Frog assistant soccer coach is reaching lifelong career goal in sports

By James Zwilling
SKIFF STAFF

Chances are when assistant soccer coach Blake Amos isn't recruiting, scheduling or on the field or making travel arrangements, he will probably be watching, reading or thinking about soccer.

Amos said his love of the game is part of all aspects of his life.

"My passion for the game sets me apart from other coaches," Amos said. "This is all I do, and this is all I want to do. Soccer is in everything I do. It's what I watch on television, what I read about and what I think about."

Amos served as a head coach for the Olympic Development Program from 1995-97 and currently serves as assistant coach to both the men's and women's teams at TCU.

Amos played midfielder for TCU from 1989-94 and began coaching immediately after.

"I was one of the few people who knew what I wanted to do when I got out of college," Amos said. "I knew what I wanted to do when I got out of high school, so I was able to gear all of my studies in that direction."

Head coach David Rubinson said that Amos was the best man for the job.

"Coaching is something Blake always wanted to do," Rubinson said. "He coached as a graduate assistant and a volunteer and he knew the program in and out. (Hiring) him made sense."

Rubinson believes Amos makes a big impact in the soccer program.

"Blake has incredible organizational skills and a no nonsense attitude that really contribute to this program," he said.

Rubinson said Amos is different from other coaches.

"The demands he puts on himself to make our teams better set him apart from other coaches," Rubinson said. "He has such a good hold on the team, he takes charge and gets so much done."

Junior midfielder Doak VanEnk, who played for Amos on an Olympic Development Program team, said he enjoys playing for him.

"Blake relates well to the players and helps us understand what we need to do as individual players," he said.

VanEnk said Amos continually motivates the team.

"(Amos) is extremely competitive, and that motivates us to do whatever it takes to win."

Amos said the challenges of soccer keep him coaching.

"Soccer is such a unique game," Amos said. "You can give the players all of the tools during the week, but during the game there is really little for the coaches to do. It's fun and challenging because you kind of get to sit back and enjoy what you've been working on all week and hope that you did your job well."

As for the future, Amos said he remains uncertain.

Baseball in '90s has been forgotten

The end of the century has brought with it a nauseating overload of lists and rankings from all sectors of society, and sports has been no exception. With all the focus on "all-century," the '90s have become the forgotten decade.

Analysis

STEPHEN SUFFRON

But I am here to right this injustice and give the '90s what it's due with the Team of the Decade:

Catcher: Mike Piazza

This position came down to two of the all-time greats, Piazza and Ivan Rodriguez. The nod goes to Piazza despite Pudge's superior defense because Rodriguez has only recently been in the same offensive league as Piazza, who is probably the greatest hitting catcher of all time.

First Base: Frank Thomas

This was among the most difficult positions to choose because the decade has been filled with great first basemen like no time since the 1930s. Selection is further complicated by the mid-decade offensive explosion. This left players who had more success early in the decade, like Cecil Fielder and Fred McGriff, at a disadvantage. Ultimately, the choice came down to Thomas, Jeff Bagwell, Mark McGwire and Rafael Palmeiro. McGwire's record-setting heroics aside, the truth is that he was just another power hitter who couldn't stay healthy until 1996. Palmeiro was the most consistent of the group, but he never put up spectacular numbers like the others until this year (as a DH). Bagwell's combination of power, ability to get on base, speed and defense made him an attractive choice, but the best first baseman of the decade was Thomas, the two-time MVP. From 1991-1997, Thomas put together a run of offensive seasons baseball hasn't seen since Ted Williams. And since first base is primarily a hitter's position, that's good enough for me.

Second Base: Roberto Alomar

Craig Biggio made a nice run for this one, but Alomar is really the clear choice here. An offensive catalyst for five division winners, Alomar also won eight Gold Gloves for his defense. He topped a .300 average seven times and 100 runs scored four times, and this year, he drove in over 120. Biggio didn't really become the player he is now until '94 or '95, and Ryne Sandberg, Chuck Knoblauch and Carlos Baerga weren't good enough long enough to compete with Alomar.

Shortstop: Barry Larkin

Larkin is the best of a group of shortstops that was really undistinguished until late in the decade. Until Alex Rodriguez hit his stride in 1996, Larkin's primary competition was an aging Cal Ripken (although Cal did win an MVP in '91). Larkin won an MVP of his own in '95 and came back with 33 home runs the next year.

three times and has won the 1996-97 Outstanding Freshman Athlete Award.

Georganne Biancardi, a sophomore cross country runner, said besides Pope pushing himself in athletics and academics, he is also friendly, outgoing and is always making sure his friends are doing OK.

"It inspires him, and he loves to do things for other people," she said. "This dedication is a good opportunity for him to do that."

In April, Brady, as a starting midfielder, led his Granbury High School soccer team to the 4A state championships, where the team defeated Nederland High School. Head coach Larry Mayo would periodically consult with Brady for the starting line-ups of the team.

Mayo said Jared and Brady were similar in that they led by example instead of verbally expressing what needed to be done.

"(Brady) put the team above himself," he said. "A lot of the time if he thought a line-up would work better without him, he would suggest that someone else play in his place." Brady grew up as a TCU fan because his mother once owned 50-yard-line seats. Attending each game, Brady became a big fan of Horned Frog running back Kenneth Davis, who played from 1982 to 1984.

Kenneth Davis, now head football coach of Dallas Bishop Dunne High School, said he dedicated the rest of his career to his brother Earnest Davis after he was injured in a head-on car collision in the spring of 1982.

"With (Pope) dedicating this season, that is an incredible credit to him not only as an athlete, but as a human being," he said. "I think those types of things put life in perspective."

Karen Brown and her husband Donnie coached Brady, his brothers Bucky and Cody, as well as Jared and his brother Zach in soccer, baseball and basketball.

Pope said they all grew up as a family—playing sports together and hanging out at each others' houses.

"I feel honored to have Karen Brown come to my cross country meets because she cares so much," he said. "When I was growing up and first began to play sports, she was one of the first people there to support me."

Pope said Brady was always "energetic and enthusiastic" when it came to helping others.

Pope was on the way to work in Fort Worth when he noticed that the police were re-routing traffic. Then, his mother called him on his cellular phone and told him that one of the Brown boys had died in a car wreck. Pope didn't find out that it was Brady who had died until he arrived at the Browns' house later that morning.

"I just had this quiet feeling like something bad had happened, and I probably knew who it was," he said. "You never know who around you is going to be there tomorrow. It has really humbled me and made me realize that the people I take for granted need to know how I feel about them."

Karen Brown said Pope was probably the first person to come to her house the day Brady died.

"There have been times that I felt the same thing as Jared did (at the cross country meet), and Brady has helped me too," she said. "So, if it helps Jared, that is great, too."

Third Base: Matt Williams

After the 1980s, with Mike Schmidt, George Brett and Wade Boggs, we were bound to see a drop-off in third base talent. But Matt Williams has been consistently outstanding both offensively and defensively. He was on a record home run pace when the strike ended the 1994 season, and he led the N.L. in RBIs in 1990. Chipper Jones has been the best lately, and Ken Caminiti won an MVP, but Williams deserves the nod.

Bonds has been baseball's best player over the last decade. He won MVPs in '90, '91, '93 and should have won it in '92. He has ranked in the top five in his league in both on-base and slugging percentage every year up to this one. Albert Belle also deserves mention here, but the '90s belonged to Bonds.

Center Field: Ken Griffey, Jr.

Unlike Bonds in left, there was no one to challenge Griffey in center. Back-to-back 50-home run seasons, an MVP and a Gold Glove every year makes Griffey a no-brainer over the likes of Bernie Williams, Ellis Burks or Kenny Lofton.

Right Field: Juan Gonzalez

This was the toughest choice to make. It came down to Gonzalez, Larry Walker and Sammy Sosa. I threw out Walker, because his stats are inflated by Colorado and they weren't that much better anyway. Sosa was so-so until the last two years, which have been awesome. Gonzalez showed the most consistency, winning two home run titles early in the decade and two MVPs later on.

Rotation: Greg Maddux, Roger Clemens, Tom Glavine, Randy Johnson, Pedro Martinez

rest, although John Smoltz, Kevin Brown and David Cone also warrant mention. Between them, they won 11 of the 18 Cy Young Awards awarded and are certain to win at least one more. Maddux is the best of the group, with four Cy Young's and a 2.21 ERA in the '90s.

Bullpen: Dennis Eckersley, John Wetteland, Trevor Hoffman

Eckersley began the decade in the midst of the best run of closer work in history, culminating with an MVP and Cy Young Award in 1992. Wetteland was the decade's save leader, and Hoffman has been baseball's best over the last five years. Rod Beck, Randy Myers, Rick Aguilera and Jeff Montgomery also merit mention.

Scout teams instrumental in game-day preparation

By Matt Stiver
STAFF REPORTER

Some of them spend their afternoons getting pulverized by offensive linemen. Others lineup against All-America candidates. But when the football team charges out of the tunnel on Saturdays, they will not.

Welcome to the life of a TCU scout team member.

But by no means are they underappreciated.

The scout teams prepare the starting units for the next game by running the sets (looks) they likely will see. For example, when TCU played Rice, the scout team offense ran the Rice's triple-option offense against the starting defense. The scout team defense ran Rice's various defensive sets against the starting offense.

Special teams coach Mark Tommerdahl said the scout teams are important to the success of the team.

"I don't like to use the word, 'critical,' but (they are) pretty important," Tommerdahl said. "They are directly responsible for providing us with the look we will see that week."

Head coach Dennis Franchione said by preparing the starters for what they will see, the scout team players have an important role.

"In some respects, their impact on the game is more significant than a back-up player that would play a few plays in the game," Franchione said.

Bruce Galbert, a freshman scout team wide receiver, said he sees the scout team as a chance for improvement.

"You can look at it as just running the other team's offense, but you can help yourself because you are going against our No. 1 defense," Galbert said.

Tommerdahl said scout players have a chance to learn.

"If I'm a young freshman, or if I don't have a lot of game experience, it's a chance for them to prove themselves against the best," Tommerdahl said. "God bless you if you are an offensive lineman and your are 18 years-old and are trying to block our defensive line. You won't find too many people that block, certainly not in this conference or at (the Division I-A) level. So you really do have a chance to learn under fire, and that's the best way to learn."

Donald Burrell, a freshman scout team defensive lineman, said he has made some memorable tackles.

"I got a couple good hits on some of the running backs and some of the linemen," Burrell said. "I'm a freshman, so I don't get that many chances to pop a running back."
