Many Ideas of Touring Body to Be Used in Plans—W. C. Hedrick Is Builder.

The move toward the construction of a vast concrete and steel athletic plant at T. C. U., for which plans are well under way, received added impetus the past week through the en-U. board of trustees. The endorse-U. board of trustees. The endorse-U. board of trustees. The indorsement was perhaps the principal action taken by the board members at their annual meeting, which has held at the university last Wednesday.

The executive committee of the board was instructed to cooperate with the Fort Worth citizens' group, of which Amon G. Carter is chairman, in the completion of the stadium proj-cet. The executive group is composed in the completion of the stadium project. The executive group is composed of W. S. Cooke, chairman; Rev. L. D. Anderson, Charles Wheeler, H. W. Stark, W. W. Mars, and E. S. Bewley. With the exception of Stark, who lives in Gainesville, all the members resident in Fort Worth.

Actual work in drawing up plans for the proposed $300,000 structurwas begun two weeks ago, immediately after the inspection committee returned from its tour of seven of the nation's finest plans. Various ideas and features were brought back by the touring group, many of which by the touring group, many of which are to be educated in T. C. U.'s plant. Wyatt C. Hedrick is the architect for the structure. It is expected that Hedrick will have the plans ready for submission to the leaders of the project same time this week.

When the construction gets under way an army of workers will be employed so that the plant will be ready for the 1930 football campaign.

Present plans call for a horseshoe structure, which, when completed, will seat 60,000 persons and will be one of the most magnificent stadiums in the Southwest. The entire plant will not be completed this year, however. Officials plan to have one side of the stadium ready for this fall. Construction of the other side and completion of the end seats will follow.

LET THE HERO REMAIN

The name of George Washington brings to mind the legendary cherry tree and the lad who did not tell a lie.

Just as so many other celebrated characters have been knocked from their pedestals, some skeptics are venturing to offer adverse criticisms of the "Father of Our Country," and trying to decrease his glory. They say he did tell a lie, and that he was not the hero he has been painted.

Of course, the cherry tree business could not make or break man, but some people seem to think it vastly important that Washington uttered a falsehood. What if he did? Most little boys do at one time or another. And if he was guilty of little boys do at one time or another. And if he was guilty of minor offenses, he was not unlike other men, either great or obscure. His numerous and outstanding deeds easily overshadow was driving the family auto.

Washington had a meagre education, comprising the simple elements—reading, writing, and arithmetic. Still, he became the first President of the United States. In this office he was a peacemaker between conflicting tendencies, warring factions, and irreconcilable interests.

Washington was unconquerable as a general, incomparable was a president, unfaltering and trustworthy as a man—a superb as a president, unfaltering and trustworthy as a man—a superb example in the history of the nation. Although the deeds accomplished by this noble figure in his lifetime were many and praise- a man has found the secret: Not worthy, it is easy to wonder today if his service to his nation then was much greater than that accomplished by his example after his death. If Washington has been unjust, tyrannical and unsuccessful as a president it is quite probable that the present form of government under a president would long since have been abolished. His example as the first president, perhaps, made it seem worth while to continue that system of government.

Small boys like him as "Cherry Tree George," who told the truth; adolescents admire Washington, the general; men uphold him as a statesman and the nation reveres him as its first president. Washington, the example, still lives today in the hearts of those who admire good men.

SCHOLARS-THE VANISHING AMERICAN

Possibly there are today, in some colleges and schools, rare students who want to obtain knowledge and worthwhile skill; they are matriculating, at least there must be a few of these eccentrics extant in the college world-and it is for the benefit of this vanishing species that we publish this lament.

For students of this type, like the American bison, are gradually disappearing from the face of the earth. With the system of teaching that is popular at this institution and in many others of its kind, earnest students are very few, although those who try to appear earnest are legion. The students themselves are partly to blame for this lamentable state of affairs, but the real murderers of the desire for knowledge are the instructors. The insistant demand of the professor is not that the student should learn—what is incidental but he should make a show of what he already knows; that he should not weep for what he lacks, but that he should boast of what he has. And so, with all of this, the race of scholars is going from us, and a new generation, very viperish, has come to be.

This desire to appear to know, works more woe for the student than he realizes. How many of us have boned and crammed until the clock crew thrice or a dozen times preparing for a quiz until the clock crew thrice or a dozen times preparing for a quiz wherein we were to prove to a disinterested instructor that we could put down more or less fluently seventy per cent of what the course consisted of? How many of us have passed such an examination and have promptly forgotten all about the subject? We did not learn anything—a dictaphone could have done the same work, told more about the subject, and could even have forgotten it more completely than we. Such a practice is not particularly favorable for the acquiring of an education, but it passes the course for one. After taking a quizille this the accuse to solve the mystery. It is rumored that he had a date on one favorable for the acquiring of an education, but it pa course for one. After taking a quiz like this, the average student retires for another month's rest, having learned what to be studied most; that is, how to get by. The little knowledge obtained from the perusal of the text is usually a by-product. Theoretically the aim of a course of instruction is the product. Theoretically the aim of a course of instruction is the product. retically the aim of a course of instruction is the mastery of a body of material, actually neither the professor nor the student pay the slightest attention to this goal, for both of them devote their attention to grades as determined by tests.

There is the situation. Perhaps we do not need a changecollege men get along some way, and perhaps a thorough training in getting by will really help the collegiate more than an education when he gets out in the wicked world. But still—it is a terrible thing to see the tribe of scholars laid to rest by the system that has grown up around them .- The Battalion.

One girl said she always thought of his his hand.

She insisted that in her mind he is always standing up shading his eyes with his hand.

Several said they thought of the cherry tree incident when they heard Washington's name mentioned.

So this is the way the "father of our country" is remembered by some in T. C. U. today.

George Washington was born in Wakefield, Va., in Westmoreland Country, Feb. 22, 1732.

During the Revolutionary War, washington was the commander-in-chief. Because he was hampered by distrust and jealousy, restricted by the lack of soldiers, and weakened by insufficient support from Congress, washington's greatness as a leader is even more conspicuous.

Under such conditions, Washing to maintained the struggle. Some times it appeared that he continued it by the sheer strength of his will alone.

Whether or not we would have been successful in defeating the Britiah is a matter for speculation, however the Americans won the Revolution with the help of the French.

Naturally when the time came for is the people to choose a leader for their country Washington was a elected. Thus in 1789 he became the first president of the United States.

He died Dec. 14, 1799.

Poem Is Dedicated

"To Harlos" Green
By an Admirer

Editor's Note: This contribution was found in The Skiff box with the following explanation.
Since Harlos Green sang "South Sea Rose" in chapel on the "T" Initiation day I have been writing a peam about him which I wish you would print in The Skiff. Harlos is such a modest little fellow and not at all like that bad bold "Whataman" Hinton that I think he deserves to have a poem dedicated to him. Some mean boys have been teasing him and calling him "Art Shires" and the "Pal of the Parlor" and even "The Boy With the Golden Toe." I think they ought to be ashamed calling him "The Parlor," why he doesn't is seem to care anything about girls at all.

To Harlos—
He's so cute, he's so nice, I've caught him blushing once or twice; He's hard to meet!

MOST of the universities in the United States seem to be going United States seem to be going in for spring football training in a big way. This idea has been in vogue only a short time, but is becoming increasingly popular with all coaches. It gives them a chance to work on the fundamentals that require so much time in the fall. It also makes it possibile to begin the fall season with a somewhat experienced squad. This training is especially valuable to freshmen who will be under the varsity coach for the first time the next year. They learn the coach's general year. They learn the coach's general style of play and know what he ex-

After the Christmas holidays 50 men report for Christmas holidays 50 men report for winter training three times a week. The practice sessions are held on a training ship anchored in New York harbor. This system of practice lasts until about the middle of March. There is no scrimmage or rough work, but the drills are concentrated on fundamentals. Much practice is necessary to master the peculiar style of huddle used by Meehan. Every man on the line must be a good center, for when Meehan uses an unbalanced line the center shifts too and the next man passes the ball back.

After about two weeks rest, Coach Meehan issues a call for spring practice around the first of April. This practice is continued until the end of school, although only three sessions a week are held. The squad at N. Y. U. is not especially large considering the total enrollment, which is over 30,000 students. Many of these, however, are night school students, and are not eligible for athletic participation. The original N. Y. U. is located near 181st Street, which is now in the heart of a residential district, but there is a branch of the university down town on lower Manhattan which handles thousands of both day and night students.

It is little wonder that N. Y. U. produces excellent athletic teams with so much material to choose from. I was told by Emil Von Elling, track coach, that a content of the men who as the graduates who ended their careers on the grid last Nov. 30 were conspicious by their absence when Wolf called the graduates who ended their careers on the grid last Nov. 30 were conspicious by their absence when Wolf called the roll Monday. A few of them have gone into track and baseball, while a number of the 1929 squad who are eligible for next season will be missing from practice because of duties on the diamond and the cinder track.

Schmidt, who at present is busy with the Frog cage team, will take charge of practice March 1. It will be remembered that the Christian mentor came down from Arkansas exactly a year from the date that has first contact with T. C. U. athletes. He had charge of the spring grid work in 1929, and a few months later built the greatest football team that has ever worn the Purple and White.

from. I was told by Emil Von Elling, track coach, that a conservative estimate of the number of boys eligible for atletics was 5,000. This is quite different from the number at T. C. U—about 500.

THE work of track coach in the conference is a seasonable job, but Von Elling said that his work at N. Y. U: gives him only about three months' vacation, and that is in the summer. They have indoor meets all winter and outdoor training begins as soon as it is warm enough. Although all winter meets are indoors, practice is held three times a week outdoors. is held three times a week outdoors. Twice a week, on Tuesdays and Thurs-days, workouts are held inside, with rubber-soled track shoes.

N. Y. U. does not have a big sta-dium of its own. All of its home foot-ball games are played in Yankee Sta-dium, with a seating capacity of 80,dium, with a seating capacity of ou, ou. 7000. There were about a dozen games on their schedule last year, and the stadium was filled to capacity for practically every contest. It is little wonder that Chick Meehan rereives an annual salary of $20,000 a year.

Rents come pretty high in New York. Madison Square Garden cost the Millrose Athletic Asso-ciation $8,600 for one night's rental.

I had quite a visit with Wade Haw-kins while in New York. He will be remembered as sports editor of The Skiff and the Horned Frog last year. He is now going to school for recrea-tion directors. Wade has no intention of settling programmently in the Fact of settling permanently in the East, but he hopes to get a director's job in Texas. He says that he enjoys living in New York, but that it cannot com-pare with the "Sunny South."
