

Brite now has notable Judaic library for its Jewish Studies program

BRITE DIVINITY SCHOOL HAS RECENTLY acquired a library and collection of Judaica that should be of interest to scholars around the world.

As part of its Jewish Studies program, Brite has purchased the personal library and collection of the late Rabbi Israel Otto Lehman of Cincinnati. It is estimated to include between 8,000 and 10,000 items.

"This collection will be of value to scholars everywhere," says W. David Nelson, Rosenthal Assistant Professor of Jewish Studies at Brite. "The core of the collection consists of approximately 200 pieces which date from the early 16th through the late 18th century."

Having a Judaica Library is the third and final aspect of Brite's Jewish Studies Program to be completed. The community outreach aspect began with the first annual Gates of Chai lecture in 1998. The teaching and research aspect was fulfilled with the naming of two distinguished faculty for the program (David Nelson is one of those).

Among the rare holdings are first and second printed editions of tractates of the Babylonian Talmud, produced around 1520 by one of the first printers of Jewish texts, Daniel Bomberg. There is also a 17th century complete polyglot Bible including Old and New Testaments and Apocrypha, as well as a 17th century Latin concordance of rabbinic literature. The collection also contains 19th century manuscripts of Jewish texts produced by the Jewish community in Yemen.

Other items include early printed prayer books and Bibles, a Persian Torah scroll container and Torah used by Sephardic Jewish communities, and liturgical scrolls and Kabbalistic (Jewish mysticism) handwritten scrolls.

"The collection is valuable not only for its rare holdings, but also for its breadth," Nelson adds. "This library can facilitate the study of Judaism in all its historical manifestations. (The collection's) value to Brite is manifold. It is a sign of this institution's commitment to intellectual pluralism, diversity and ecumenical thought. It is also a sign of the connection between this institution and the Jewish community in Fort Worth."

The collection will be used by TCU undergraduates, as well as students enrolled in Brite's master of divinity program and doctoral programs.

Nelson says Brite's acquisition of Dr. Lehman's collection is indicative of the shift in Jewish educational demographics in the United States, "which is mirrored in the development of a nascent program in Jewish studies here."

"It is also interesting that some of the more valuable pieces of the collection were printed by Bomberg, a non-Jew from Antwerp living in Venice. So many of the first Hebraic texts were printed by a non-Jew," according to Nelson.

Nelson says much more needs to be done to formally catalog all of the holdings in the collection, which is currently stored in an off-campus warehouse. That work is going on now.

Campus recognized for environmental efforts

TCU HAS BEEN CITED IN A RECENT national survey of college and university environmental practices conducted by the National Wildlife Federation. The report, based on findings from 891 institutions of higher education, provides "green grades" in more than 20 categories, ranging from curriculum to water use, transportation programs and energy efficiency.

TCU earned its listing as a "Leading School" for "recycling 60% or more of the total municipal waste generated." According to Robert Sulak (physical plant), TCU has replaced almost half its trash dumpsters, 11 in all, with recycling dumpsters around those buildings which generate primarily paper waste, rather than food waste. In addition to the environmental benefits, TCU enjoys a significant cost savings from the trash hauler, according to Robert.

The National Wildlife Federation will use the findings of the recent study as part of its efforts to enhance higher education's contributions to environmental challenges. "[We are] interested not only in helping colleges and universities reduce their toll on the environment, but also in providing students the practical lessons and tools they need to implement positive change when they leave the campus," said Mark Van Putten, president and CEO of the NWF.

The full NWF report is available on the Web at www.nwf.org/campusecology/stateofthecampusenvironment/index.html. ♦
