EVENTS AND INFORMATION FOR THE TCU COMMUNITY

OCTOBER 3, 2005

The Wall Street Journal ranks Neeley School among region's top business schools

THE NEELEY SCHOOL OF BUSINESS HAS BEEN ranked as No. 18 among regional programs in the nation by The Wall Street Journal Guide to Top Business Schools and was the highest ranked Texas program in the regional rankings.

The rankings were the result of a survey conducted by The Wall Street Journal and Harris Interactive that examined recruiter rankings on 20 different attributes of each MBA program, as well as to rate the past and future recruiting plans at each school. Recruiters gave the Neeley School high marks on student's teamwork abilities, personal ethics and integrity, the core curriculum and the career-services offices.

According to Daniel Short, dean of the Neeley School, the ranking reflects the enduring commitment the school has for providing a high quality, personalized education to the students that helps prepare them for their careers. "As the premier business program in Texas, our goal is to help each individual develop to the full extent of his or her unique potential. Recognition by recruiters is especially significant because it is positive proof that the market recognizes the quality of our graduates."

The Wall Street Journal's Guide to Top Business Schools is the only business school ranking based solely on feedback from corporate recruiters. In a special editor's note, The Wall Street Journal highlights that the most distinctive feature of this survey is that it focuses strongly on corporate recruiters and the job market. "As the buyers of MBA talent, recruiters have strong opinions about the schools they know best. And, those opinions should be of the utmost importance to prospective students who, after all, hope to graduate into a better job." Additionally, "According to a survey of prospective MBA students by the Graduate Management Admission Council, the Journal's rankings were rated the 'most credible' of all media rankings."

This is the second consecutive year the Neeley School of Business has been honored in The Wall Street Journal ranking. ♦
