Dear Clark:

It was nice hearing from you and knowing that you are well. Yes, I well remember all the earliest impulses that have finally flowered into the completion of the Greater Fort Worth International Airport, recently named Amon Carter Field. I recall yours and Roy Mitchell's site planning and every detail and personality that has had a part.

Since C. R. assigned this as my major project back in 1937, I have made it my number one objective and I am happy in the realization that so many obstacles have been overcome and we can assess our effort as a worthy contribution to the development of Fort Worth and aviation.

The most satisfying service that I rendered in the whole sequence of things was that of leading and coordinating the plan to name the Field for my good friend who has done so much for Fort Worth and for us all.

It will exist down through the generations to honor this great personality who symbolizes the leadership, courage and vision that distinguishes our nation which has, and with the grace of God always will, defend the liberties and freedoms of all mankind. Appropriately it will be "Amon Carter Field".
