

—Associated Press Wirephoto.

WHITE HOUSE GUESTS—Amon Carter Jr., president of the Star-Telegram, escorts his wife and mother, Mrs. Burton Carter, as they leave their Washington hotel for a White House dinner. Cabinet members and friends of President and Mrs. Eisenhower also were guests.

Five of Fort Worth Ike Dinner Guests

BY EDWARD JAMIESON,
Star-Telegram Washington Bureau.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 1. — President and Mrs. Eisenhower had among their guests for a special White House dinner Thursday night five from the President's native state of Texas, and all of them were from Fort Worth.

Attending the dinner, limited to about 80 guests, and perhaps the last which the President and his wife will give, were Mr. and Mrs. Amon Carter Jr., Mrs. Burton Carter and Mr. and Mrs. Perry Bass.

Top guests at the dinner, second to be given this week at the White House in honor of present and past members of the Eisenhower cabinet, were Vice President and Mrs. Nixon.

Cabinet members and those who have served with Eisenhower during the nearly eight years he has been President included Attorney General and Mrs. William P. Rogers, Postmaster General and Mrs. Arthur Summerfield, Secretary of Interior and Mrs. Fred A. Seaton, Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare and Mrs. Arthur Flemming, Secretary of Commerce Fred Mueller, Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission and Mrs. John A. McCone, Director of the Budget and Mrs. Maurice H. Stans, and Director of the Office of Civilian Defense Mobilization and Mrs. Leo A. Hoegh.

Among others present were Gov. and Mrs. Nelson Rockefeller of New York; Henry Cabot Lodge, who was Nixon's running mate in the recent election, and Mrs. Lodge; former Secretary of Treasury and Mrs. George Humphrey; Mrs. John Foster Dulles, widow of the late secretary of state; Mrs. Martin P. Durkin, widow of the late secretary of labor, and former Secretary of Defense and Mrs. Neil McElroy.

For the occasion, Mrs. Amon G. Carter Jr. chose a Ben Reig original of American beauty satin brocade. Although she had not met Mrs. Eisenhower previously, Mrs. Carter and the President had shared a meal some while back when he went to Fort Worth for the dedication of the Will Rogers Memorial. This was a luncheon given by the late Amon Carter and Mrs. Carter in Eisenhower's honor after the dedicatory ceremonies.

Amon Carter Jr. has been the President's guest at several stag dinners during the last eight years.

Mrs. Burton Carter was attired in a gown of filmy royal blue chiffon made over an emerald green sheath elaborately trimmed with sequins.

She told friends that this is her first trip to Washington since her daughter's graduation from Miss Madeira's School at Greenway, Va., in the early Forties.

This was the second and final of two farewell dinners the Eisenhowers have given in honor of present and former members of the Eisenhower cabinet. Therefore, it was only natural that a touch of nostalgia should have pervaded both Thursday night's dinner and the previous one given on the preceding evening.

Despite the formal "white tie" dress, both occasions were marked to a certain extent by informality.

At variance with most White House events, guests were invited to arrive at 7:30, instead of the usual 8, and were ushered upstairs to the Eisenhowers' private quarters on the second floor for an informal reception first.

The only other times this has been done during the Eisenhower years has been at informal birthday or holiday gatherings, never at white tie events, according to Mrs. Eisenhower's social secretary, Mrs. Mary Jane McCaffree.

After both dinners there was dancing in the East Ballroom, with music supplied by orchestra units from the various military services. Guests were serenaded by the Air Force Singing Strings (a group of strolling violinists) while having their after-dinner coffee.

The menu started with pate de foie gras in aspic, followed by horseradish soup. Danish tomatoes were served with seafood in vol-au-vent for the third course. The main course was Delmonico roast with Irish apple garnish, and two vegetables — scalloped potatoes and buttered asparagus. Crisp cheese crusts accompanied the orange and roquefort salad, and for dessert the guests were served frozen rum pudding with butterscotch sauce and macaroons.

Thais Report Cholera

BANGKOK, Thailand, Dec. 1 (AP). — About 100 cases of cholera were reported Thursday in Ubol City and authorities have declared an emergency. Ubol, 500 miles from Bangkok, is still recovering from a fire three weeks ago that left 3,000 homeless.