HOWDY, MR. SECRETARY!—Secretary of the Army Frank Pace Jr., right, is shown as he was greeted in the Fort Worth Club Wednesday by August C. Esenwein, manager of Convair's Fort Worth division. Pace is wearing a Shady Oak hat presented him by Amon Carter.

Pace Sees Leadership By America

America will lead the world for 100 years to come, relieved of "the doubts and fears of today" if the defense department succeeds in what it has set out to do, Secretary of the Army Frank Pace Jr. said in Fort Worth Wednesday.

The slim, 39-year-old one-time Army private who now bosses generals, spoke at a Fort Worth Club breakfast attended by about 60 business and civic leaders here.

He said the nation was being forced to establish a two-prong defense which could be developed, if necessary, into a two-pronged offensive—"a sound economy and the kind of strength that may be necessary eventually to discourage the other fellow."

Money Spent Wisely.

Pace assured the businessmen that taxpayers' money was being spent wisely on defense.

"We are spending tax money intelligently," he said. "We are not building obsolete weapons. We are not stockpiling material carelessly. We are putting our money into capital investments.

"We are building production lines that will produce material of four times the quantity we are getting today. We have installed in the Army a management system that would win the approval of you gentlemen as businessmen."

Pace, a World War II private who rose to major, said the Department of the Army had attracted young men of "decency and courage," including a Fort Worth lawyer, Fred Korth.

Korth, now a deputy counselor with Pace's department, accompanied the secretary here.

Problem Solved.

"We are proving that the problem of bringing good men into government can be solved and decency and integrity can be realized in government," Pace said.

Pace praised Korth highly and said the Fort Worth man came to Washington "out of friendship and a deep sense of public service."

Pace, in turn, was praised by Amon Carter, the breakfast host, and Sid W. Richardson.

"You are a fair hand and are doing a good job," Richardson said of the young Army secretary.

City's New Airport Called Amazing by Army Secretary

"Amazing!"

That was the reaction of Secretary of the Army Frank Pace Jr. after an inspection of Amon Carter Field and the Greater Fort Worth International Airport Wednesday.

As he walked briskly along the runways built for the most modern aircraft and inspected the facilities that could be quickly converted to defense purposes, the young Army chief added:

"I am glad to see all this. The nation may need it."

Pace praised the scope of the airport, stating: "A tremendous amount of vision has gone into this."

The Army secretary toured the huge field at the end of his overnight visit here.

His guides were Sid W. Richardson, Maury H. Huffman, executive director of Fort Worth Air Terminal, Inc., Joseph R. Pelich, architect, and Amon Carter.

"It is one of the most modern things I have ever seen," Pace agreed when told that aviation leaders from other cities had described the new airport as "the finest of its kind in the nation."

Pace asked many questions as he walked through the rapidly rising administration building, which has a floor space of 224,368 square feet and can be expanded to double that size.

He listened intently, nodding with satisfaction, when told that the airport will be one of the safest ever built, both for civilian and military flying operations.

Pace's plane, a four-engine Constellation, landed at the field while he toured the airport. The secretary, his aide, Lt. Col. J. R. Deane Jr., and Fred Korth, his deputy counselor, boarded it for the return trip to Washington.

They departed at 10:25 a. m. Pace rode from the Fort Worth Club to the airport in a car with Richardson and Carter.

tary. "I wish we had more like you on the team up there."

"We think you are doing a good job in getting the country ready," Carter said. "We hope you will hold off firing as long as you can but when you hit them don't miss."

Carter said people in other lands would be happy to pay as much taxes and more than American citizens for the privilege of living in this country.

Fort Worth Chamber of Commerce President Berl Godfrey also lauded Pace, saying the city realized how important the government's contribution had been to the community's growth of the last 10 years.

"We offer all our facilities to defense," Godfrey said. "We still have untapped resources to help fight the spread of communism. We are ready to do anything we can to defend the United States and preserve our liberties."

Carter presented Pace a Shady Oak hat at the breakfast Wednesday.

The Army secretary arrived at Carswell Air Force Base Tuesday in a Constellation plane.

He stopped overnight en route to Washington after filling speaking engagements at Beaumont and Galveston.

In a Tuesday interview Pace said officer candidate schools were becoming an increasingly effective source of commissioned manpower for ground forces.

He said that the Army's policy of pulling troops out of the Korean fighting on a rotation plan required additional men to go in as replacements "but calls for enlisted reserves have been gradually declining—we want to have men who have been over there back here by Christmas."

He said "great strides" were being made in development of new weapons not used in World War II.

Commenting on current peace feelers and the Korean truce talks, Pace said it was a case of "waiting" to see what happens.

Tuesday Pace was a member of an illustrious golf foursome at Colonial Country Club here. Other players were Maj. Gen. Samuel E. Anderson, 8th Air Force commander, Marvin Leonard and Ben Hogan.

While here he also conferred with Marshall H. Kennady, his civilian aide in Texas.
