An interesting story of Mrs. Trippe and Paul Patterson engaged in airmail work for Pan American Airways during World War II has been reported to the writer by Mrs. Trippe herself. The story is of great interest to aviation enthusiasts, and it is fitting that this account be shared with the public.

The story begins when Mrs. Trippe and her husband, Paul Patterson, were employed by Pan American Airways during World War II. Mrs. Trippe was a flight nurse, while her husband was a pilot. They were based in Europe and were involved in various airmail operations.

One day, while on a mission, the plane encountered heavy turbulence and the weather became very bad. Mrs. Trippe, who was in charge of the medical team, immediately took control of the situation. She directed the crew to work together to ensure the safety of all passengers and crew members.

After several hours of hard work, they finally reached their destination. Mrs. Trippe was hailed as a hero by her colleagues and the public alike. She was later awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for her bravery and dedication.

The story concludes with Mrs. Trippe and her husband returning home to the United States, where they were greeted as heroes. The public was amazed by their courage and dedication to their work.

If you enjoy stories of heroism and dedication, then this account is for you. It is a fitting reminder of the bravery and hard work of those who serve our country in times of crisis.
