

The READERS' DIGEST

Dear Amon:

Contrary to the usual course of events it seems to me that the impressions received on the exciting South American trip, instead of fading, get more and more vivid as the weeks pass by. I do not think I shall ever forget some of these mental pictures, and I know I shall not forget the members of the party.

As a kind of memento, I'm sending you a book. There are to be four of these a year; they are offered only to mail subscribers of Reader's Digest. This is the second volume. I couldn't send you a copy of the first book because a thumping big edition is completely sold out. Apparently we have a success on our hands. I thought you might be interested in a novel publishing idea -- and anyway, you'll have some good reading.

Let's go traveling again sometime. Maybe organize a trip on our own if Juan runs out of new routes and new planes.

Sincerely,

Marc
