

Prisoner of War

THERE is good news of Lieutenant Amon Carter, the young American artillery officer who, as I mentioned last week, has been reported missing in Tunisia. His father, Mr. Amon Carter, proprietor of the Fort Worth (Texas) Star-Telegram, has received a message reporting that his son is now a prisoner of war in Germany.

Both father and son made many friends in London last winter. Not only Texans, but Americans in general and many English friends, will rejoice with Mr. Carter in this good news. Many visitors to his home in Texas have cause to be grateful to him.

Mr. Carter is a fine journalist and a man of affairs, who has given his newspaper not only a local but a nationwide reputation. I hope that soon he will be welcoming his son home to Texas even more heartily than he welcomes his friends.
