Lt. Amon Carter, Jr., Now Prisoner of War in Germany

Lt. Amon Carter Jr., reported missing in action in Central Tunisia since Feb. 14, is a prisoner of the Germans and has been removed to Germany.

This information came to his father, Amon Carter, from the War Department Wednesday afternoon.

Lt. Carter was with an armored unit and had been in Africa since December. Notification that he was missing was received March 11.

The young artillery officer, graduate of Culver Military Academy and former student at the University of Texas, was called into active service in 1941. He trained at Fort Knox, Ky., and spent some time with his division in Ireland and England before going to Africa.

The date of being reported missing coincides with the opening of the original German offensive through Faid Pass.
