ICY HIGHWAYS IMPERIAL
Travel in Panhandle

A prediction of snow and possibly the coldest weather of the season for the Fort Worth area came Thursday night as heavy snow swirled down over the Panhandle and part of the South Plains.

Roads in the snow-blanketed region were described as hazardous.

The forecast for the Fort Worth area calls for cloudy, cold and occasional rain mixed with snow Friday.

The highest temperature Friday is expected to be around 40 degrees with a low tonight in the upper 20s. The low for this season was 29 degrees Oct. 27.

The mercury is scheduled to get into the middle 40s Saturday afternoon as partly cloudy skies return.

An average of at least five inches of snow fell Thursday from Dumas north to the Oklahoma border. Amarillo got two inches and up to four inches fell from just west of the city to the New Mexico line.

Heavy snow also fell in northeastern sections of Oklahoma and New Mexico.

The snow line extended as far south as Lubbock and Brownwood and as far east as Childress.

The transportation department said Highway 87 north of Amarillo was extremely hazardous over a nine-mile stretch. Highway 39 was passable between Goodnight and Claude.

Ducks piled up faster than a crowd at a rodeo near the western edge of Amarillo near Vega and Anton. City leaders were worried they would occur in the latter two towns and told them to be on the lookout west.

According to state officials, winds were blowing at 20 to 30 miles per hour and snow was falling at between 1 and 2 inches per hour.

The snow, the first of the season for the South Plains, ranged from three inches in the Panhandle to an inch in the High Plains.
