Mrs. Ferguson's legal adviser told her not to call the legislature in special session and this advice was gladly received. Her legal adviser once lost his job at a special session and he don't want to lose it any more. If Jim had been as careful with the state's money in road affairs as he is now in regard to the expense of calling the legislature in special session, his highway commission would not of had to resign so quickly after the courts had run down the expenditures in that department.
