Maybe Mrs. Wilman's observations of how a woman governor may have to answer for the actions of her husband has led her to announce that if she is elected governor she pledges herself to remain single until her term expires. But she overlooks the fact that it is quite possible for a husband to the governor to make tidy sums on the side as attorney for railroads, as next friend to road contractors, as advisor for applicants for pardons, as publisher of a newspaper which has a fine patronage from road contractors, and general handy man. With a real thrifty husband, a woman governor could probably go out of office at the end of one term with a far larger bank account than she could if she held office in single blessedness for three terms.
