In the light of recent events it is not easy to find a man who will acknowledge that he voted for Ma Ferguson, even in the runoff, but we did; and most of the voters apparently viewed the political situation as we did: Jim was a political dead duck on account of his impeachment and wanted vindication and restoration into the good graces of Texas voters. It was believed that if Mrs. Ferguson was elected the idea of vindication would be adhered to and Texas would have the best administration in years. But it seems that the idea of vindication was carried no further than the second primary. And there's a reason. Jim is no political fool: he saw that his wife's election was no vindication for him but a defeat for the Klan, so the vindication idea was dropped and Texas given a rotten administration.
