If Jim Ferguson could write a new dictionary he'd leave the word "vindicate" out of it.

The Wichita Falls Times is publishing much of the road mess and special session interviews. Ma is liable to ask for another resignation.

Maybe Ma's delay in appointing some highway commissioners is because she can't find any who are willing to associate with Jim.

Those four boobs who escaped the state penitentiary last week evidently did not know Ma's address or they would have had a pardon and saved notoriety.

The circus has pulled stakes and gone to winter quarters. The American Road Company has done the same thing, except they had more "stakes."

Frank Lanham is an optimist for your whiskers. After letting Jim Ferguson and the American Road Company stack the cards and bleed the highway treasury dry, he bawls out Attorney General Moody for breaking up the game before the capitol was shoved in the pot.

The Wichita Daily Times accepts Ma's booze proclamation with open arms, though it be "merely dragging a herring across the trail to confuse the chase." If the Times has its ear to the ground it might claim a few of those $500 rewards. If it wants to deal in glittering generalities, only, it might chuck the job up to Preacher Barnes.

When a big road contracting concern, headed by men of supposed high character, surrenders its right to do business in Texas, and confesses that it has fraudulently taken six hundred thousand dollars of public money, what defense is there to be made? The people are safe in their conclusions. The road company is making no defense and it ill becomes Mr. Ferguson to make it for them. An apology would sound more appropriate than an attempted defense. They were caught with the goods.
