AT THIS distance it seems that the real objective of the special session of the Legislature is to impeach Mrs. Ferguson. Evidently there is plenty of evidence to bring about impeachment and once removed from power many other important things will be brought to light. Ma says that "woman's intuition tells me not to call the Legislature in special session, for when that was done in 1917 troubles started for the Ferguson family." Ma is right when she says trouble will again start and the Fergusons will be in the middle of it. Ma's administration has been a source of apology to Jim's friends since they entered office at Austin. True friends of the past are now abandoning the Ferguson camp, never to return. Ferguson had a chance to redeem the family name but was drunk on power and would not listen to the men who made his wife governor. When a man reaches a point in life that he will not listen or obey his friends, soon finds himself friendless. If friendless, one has no chance.
