Pocatello, July 27, 1883.

My dear Sally,

Your letter of the 22d and Brothers of the 23d have been received. I am sorry you made a failure with your soup. Don't trouble about it. Perhaps I shall get some one else to make it. But be sure your's and a load of corn to join. Brothers can get somebody keep his pony and carry the mail in his place while he is gone. I do hope, Sally, that you will preser to take that trip, and that you will enjoy it. Don't take it just for my sake and that of the children. If you feel that it will be a burden instead of pleasure, I would not have you take it. It is for your sake... that I suggest it. I think that you will enjoy it. The railroad will not be long, and will be in the day time. I shall have time to come back with you from Melissa, if I do not get any one else to go with you. I have written to Jesus about your coming, and suggested to him that I might put you in his care on his return to Addisaw. I have written to Jesus to do just as he please about remaining at Addisaw, and to consult his own interest entirely. He is a dear good man, and I mean intend to live here than a brother, but he is too similar for such caretaker that he is engaged in at Addisaw.

Look for me next Sunday or Wednesday next, and be ready, but don't worry. I shall have plenty of time to get things ready after I get home.

I am sorry to hear of your trouble with your legs. I am anxious about that trouble, but do not think there can be any permanent trouble. The most good you can do is to rest, though. I shall take no chances next session, and shall try to arrange as much as possible for your comfort.

Very truly yours,

And I have no sermon prepared. I know with the headache this morning, and have not felt like studying or reading. I am behind with my Bible reading. I wrote a long letter to mother this morning and have insisted on her going with us to Melissa. She can see some of her other friends near there, and oh yes! Sally, you can go to see Fannie. It is just a little way above there. I can write to Ed and have him meet you at the
By put near his house.
After 10 and preaching at 11.

Good bye.
Addie
