A. Blair;

When the work on the College was finished I drew up the account of the same and sent it to you, to which you made a number of alterations, the amount of which has been more than enough to bring the paper to the point where the payments would at different times and in different ways be a correct statement of the same. I have to say I am compelled to thank you for your kind notice. This I have thought to be said on the subject of the account.
 I have to say also that the work on the account has been done in the most correct and proper manner. I am, Sir, Dear Sir, your obedient servant
