Friend Carter:

I was in New York last week and when listening to the radio and reading the New York papers I was delighted on several occasions to see your picture and hear news of you and the other publishers who were visiting in Europe - and then to get the word that your son, a prisoner, was released and that you had met him.

I think I can rise to a height sufficient to understand your great joy on this occasion. Even if you had advanced notice of his being released and that you were going to meet him, the actual occasion must have made you jump for joy.

With all the anxieties that you experienced from the first moment that he left home and all the things that happened along his way these many months, I am sure you must feel that there is something under heaven that is good to you.

Sincerely,
