Former student found victim of possible suicide

By LIZ CARDENAS and JOE LATTANZI TCU Daily Skiff

A former university student was found dead of a shotgun wound early Tuesday morning in a car in Forest Park about a quarter of a mile from the campus.

According to the Tarrant County Medical Examiner's office, the former student's death has been ruled as an

Police identified the victim as Robert Ware, 22, who lived at 708 Keystone in Mesquite, Texas, said Lt. Ralph Swearingen, a Fort Worth police spokesman. Swearingen said a park security guard found Ware about 8:40 a.m. Tuesday in a locked car in the 2600 block of South Forest Drive in Forest Park.

The security guard found Ware dead from a shotgun wound to his head with the shotgun between his legs, Swearingen said.

He said police had not found anyone who actually witnessed Ware's death.

Police have no motive for Ware's death because it is too early in the investigation, Swearingen said. There is also no evidence of foul play surrounding Ware's death at this time, he said. Swearingen said Ware apparently died sometime between Tuesday and Wednesday, but the exact time of death has not yet been determined. Ware's body was officially discovered at 8:48 a.m. Tuesday, but the exact time of death cannot be deter- of Ware. mined until an autopsy and toxicology tests have been completed, said Tom Gaylor, a medical investigator with the medical examiner's office. The medical examiner's office ruled the cause of

Ware's death as a shotgun wound to the head, Gaylor

He also said there was no evidence of foul play surrounding Ware's death at this time. The medical examiner's office provisionally ruled the manner of Ware's death as a suicide pending the results of the autopsy and the toxicology tests, Gaylor said.

The toxicology tests will be completed within four to six weeks, he said.

Medical examiner records listed Ware's only known next of kin as his father, Robert Ware, of Cincinnati,

A Fort Worth police report gave the following account of the circumstances surrounding the discovery of Ware's

•About 8 a.m., the security guard stopped police in the 2700 block of Forest Park Boulevard and told them he had found a body in a car during a routine inspection of •Police entered the park and found Ware's body inside a locked car at the south end of Forest Drive South.

•The initial police investigation found a shotgun between Ware's legs and determined he had died from a severe

•The Tarrant County Mortician's Service took Ware's body to the Texas College of Osteopathic Medicine's morgue.

Ware's death is causing a lot of confusion right now, said Scott Stirts, Sigma Nu alumnus and a pledge brother

Health center offers vaccinations as flu season arrives

By TARA MALONEY TCU Daily Skiff

Cold weather means one thing the flu season is just around the cor-

The health center has already begun giving an influenza virus vaccine to students. The cost of the shot is $10, the same price as last

"The flu is like a bad cold to the tenth power," said Dr. Burton Schwartz, a physician at the health center. "It usually lasts for seven to 10 days or longer. When you get the flu you miss work, miss school and get behind. The flu doesn't fit in with a busy schedule."

"The flu vaccine does not give you the flu," Schwartz said. "It is an inactivated virus given in the form of a shot in the arm."

Schwartz said students should get their flu shots now because it takes several weeks for the vaccine to take effect.

"Last year's flu vaccine does not cover you for this year because there are different vaccines," he said. "The vaccine doesn't last forever — only a couple of months."

The people most at risk of flu complications are the elderly as well as people with heart disease; lung disease, including asthma and chronic bronchitis; diabetes, chronic kidney disease; chronic anemia, including sickle cell disease and immune system disorders, Schwartz

Schwartz said the flu shot should be given to students going to foreign countries over Christmas break, students living in dorms or crowded conditions and students who work — waiting tables, baby sitting or anyone who meets the public.

"We at the health center have all gotten our flu shots because we are around people with germs," he said.

Middle-aged people and senior citizens should get the shot because older people who get the flu do not handle it as well, Schwartz said.

People who are allergic to chicken eggs should not get the shot because the vaccine is made from protein found in chicken eggs, and pregnant women should discuss the risks and benefits with their obstetrician before getting the shot, he

"Students need to realize that they have some control over what they get in the cold and flu season,"

Students need to get at least eight hours of uninterrupted sleep a night, eat three square meals a day, get in the habit of drinking fruit juices with vitamin C, drink plenty of water and get some form of exercise, Schwartz said.

"You should take these precautions if you think you are getting sick and also when you are sick," he said. "These steps allow students to build up resistance and prevent serious colds and such.'

The flu produces fever, generalized muscle pain, weakness and a dry, hacking cough, Schwartz said. If students feel they are getting the flu, they should seek a doctor's care immediately, he said. "On occasion we will give students Amantadine (an anti-viral drug) in the early stage of the flu to reduce symptoms and shorten the course," he said. "There are some side effects such as an upset stomach." Students should visit their doctor early to see if they are a candidate for the drug, Schwartz said.

"The flu is a virus — there is no antibiotic that will cure the flu," he said. "Sometimes there are complications such as ear or chest infections for which antibiotics could be prescribed.'

Students who get the flu should take a steamy shower, drink plenty of juices, eat, and if the stomach is not upset, get plenty of sleep and try to stay away from crowds, he said.

"There are some over the counter as well as prescribed medicines to help with the symptoms," he said. "But never take aspirin during the flu season. Tylenol is a better suggestion."

Aspirin has been associated with Reye's Syndrome, a flu and chicken pox complication that can cause vomiting, convulsions, brain damage and death in children, Schwartz

Students do not need an appointment at the health center to get the flu vaccine, he said.

Students from TCU, Mexico to dicuss free trade agreement

By ANGELA WRIGHT TCU Daily Skiff

Ten TCU students and 10 students from La Universidad de las Americas began a series of discussions yesterday on campus on the impact of the North American Free Trade Agree-

At the same time, President Bush, Prime Minister of Canada Brian Mulroney and Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari signed the NAFTA document yesterday in San Antonio. The agreement will eliminate all tariffs and trade barriers between the United States, Mexico and Canada if the three countries approve it.

These students, along with representatives from local companies and community leaders, will discuss the impact of the document on businesses and the opportunities for students in a forum at 1:30 p.m. today.

Benjamin Trujillo, a senior political science major, is one of the ten TCU students chosen to take part in the discussions.

"Our biggest goal is to have an exchange of information," Trujillo said. "This is a chance for us to see how the people of Mexico feel about Another forum will be held at 10:30 a.m. Friday to allow TCU students to express their views on the agreement. The concluding forum, also open to the public, will be held at 2 p.m. in Moudy Building Room 141N. At the session, titled "What Might the Future Bring?," the 20 students will give their predictions of the NAFTA agreement.

Michael Dodson, professor of political science and Dan French and Joe Lipscomb of M.J. Neeley School of Business will also take part in the NAFTA discussions.

French said TCU and La Universidad de las Americas have agreed to engage in a faculty and student exchange program. The program will allow the universities to exchange faculty as well as students for a semester without the application pro-

"I hope these discussions will get students interested in the exchange relationship between TCU and UDLA and also to think in global terms," French said.

The NAFTA discussions will continue on Oct. 27 to Nov. 1 in Puebla, Mexico, on the UDLA campus. The 10 UDLA students and two UDLA faculty members, Augstin Garcia Jimenez of international relations and Manuel Mancito del Castillo of business administration, will host the 10 TCU students and the three faculty members there.

Along with those 10 TCU students traveling to Mexico will be editor Lisa Yonco and photo editor Aimee Herring of the TCU Daily Skiff to cover the NAFTA talks.

"We were asked to go in an effort to bring the members of the TCU newspaper into the midst of seminars that will affect not only individual students but also the future of America and Mexico," Yonco said.

Housing divides duties as Mills replaces Barr

Department gives new responsibilities to staff members on interim basis

By LISA MCKENNA TCU Daily Skiff

The organizational structure of the Office of Residential Living and Housing changed on an interim basis

Don Mills, formerly associate vice chancellor for student affairs, is now interim vice chancellor for the same department.

Mills was given interim duties when former Vice Chancellor Margaret Barr left to take a job at Northwestern University. Consequently, Mills' duties as the associate vice chancellor had to be reassigned to various directors of student affairs.

One of Mills' responsibilities that had to be accounted for was director of housing.

The interim duties in housing were therefore turned over to Residential Living and Housing staff members Emily Burgwyn and Wanda Olson.

Burgwyn, who has been the associate director of housing since 1988, is now the interim director of hous-

She will be responsible for the operational aspects of housing.

Olson was named the interim director of residence life. She is responsible for student life and programs in residence halls. Olson was formerly assistant director of residence life since 1988 and the coordinator of residential living for the past three years.

The new duties of Olson and Burgwyn now encompass the responsibilities Mills had as housing director.

Mills said the changes are only temporary, and once a vice chancellor is chosen, a permanent decision concerning job responsibilities will

"I am very pleased that Emily (Burgwyn) and Wanda (Olson) have agreed to accept additional responsibilities during this time of interim organization in student affairs," Mills said. "Both bring to their positions many years of experience and expertise at TCU. I am confident that the Office of Residential Living and Housing will prosper under their leadership this year.

International frogs leap in enrollment

By OLIVER STIER TCU Daily Skiff

There are 267 international students representing 59 different countries attending the university this fall. The majority of the students came from countries on the Southeast Asian Pacific Rim.

The countries having the leading enrollment at TCU are Japan with 23 students, China with 22 students, Taiwan with 17 students, and Canada and Germany with 16 students each.

Al Mladenka, director of International Affairs, said most of the Chinese students are enrolled in graduate programs in the physical sciences. A majority of these students are on graduate scholarships, Mladenka

"The good reputation of TCU's physics and chemistry department and the kind of research the departments are doing have attracted many graduate students from China," he

Students in China receive their bachelor's degree and then work in assigned units for five years, Mladenka said. Only after they have completed the required five years of work, may they apply for study abroad programs, he said.

Many students from China apply to undergraduate programs abroad but most can not take part in the programs because, "immigration authorities won't grant them visas for financial reasons," Mladenka said.

The Chinese students' involvement in the physical sciences is contrasted by the Japanese students' involvement in the humanities, Mladenka said. The majority of those involved in the Intensive English Language course, introduced last fall, were Japanese students, he said.

The number of Japanese students involved in TCU's program has increased from two to 23 in the past year because of the strong recruiting program that America uses, Mladenka said

A large majority of the students from Taiwan are enrolled in undergraduate programs, he said.

"Taiwan has always been one of the leading countries for students in the United States," he said. "The reason for this strong study abroad attitude is that the Taiwanese people rely on U.S. education to catch up with Western standards."

This year's 267 international students represent a new record high in international enrollment at the university, Mladenka said. The office of International Affairs plans on continuing its recruiting trips to target students in Southeast Asia, he said.

Yes, folks, just when you thought that Ringling Brothers and Barnum and Bailey was the only circus with three rings, the 1992 election proved that Kenneth Feld may need to reconsider his claim to having the greatest show on earth.

This year's election is a show to rival all with elephants that can read lips but cannot spell in ring one, donkeys (or are they jack asses?) that can allegedly smoke marijuana without inhaling in ring two, and in the center ring an indecisive dwarf with record-breaking The ringmaster? Well, there are a few this year. They range from anyone like record-breaking Larry King to anyone else like Joan Lunden. Even Phil Donahue has offered his High above . studio to be the sight of a Presidential debate. Yeah right, Phil. But when the dust settles from the stir the elephant and the donkey have caused by their mudslinging, it always seems that the ringmaster gives the little dwarf with the huge purse in the center ring the spot-

Some people insist that the ringmaster is just plain taken with him because he's such an odd little character: he shoots from his hip — sometimes tripping over his tongue - but he always seems to remount his little beast of determination and ride

On the other hand, his ears do make him look comical.

A few freckles and he could pass for Howdy Doody.

It will be fascinating to see what role this little guy will play in the grand finale, the big finish, election day. Analysts say that he will not be able to steal the limelight from the elephant and donkey for long. They even report that the dwarf's mere existence will benefit the elephant, but there is one last act in this production—the debates. The donkey, the elephant and the dwarf will go head-to-head, snout-totusks-to- . . . well, hope he can reach. They will be forced to deal with real issues draft records and family values aside.

Some voters have expressed shear disgust about the election and resent that it has degenerated to a three-ring circus. I don't see it that way. I love the antics. The fun comes when you witness just how many hoops these animals are willing to jump through just to get elected. I figure either way the election turns out we are bound to get a monkey in office. Why not watch them tap dance to get there and

The show will only get better as we approach November, and it is bound to have a few more unexpected good twists. The only problem is that when fat lady Bush has belted out her last refrain, if issues have not been addressed, the voter will not get their money's worth.

President Bush's successes in foreign policy arena merit reelection ... NOT

After months of centering around the economy, the debate between the two real contenders in the presidential election is beginning to include this nation's foreign

CARRUTH

George Bush claims to have had his greatest successes in foreign policy. Wednesday's signing of the North American Free Trade Agreement in San Antonio is meant to be seen as another Bush accomplishment. However, foreign policy is the only area that Bush has seen any level of success, and his "success" is very questionable at best. What seemingly may be gains turn out to be consequences of a view made obsolete by the changing world.

The Cold War ideology of Bush and company should have been brought down right along with the Berlin Wall. The Bush administration has failed miserably in dealing with the breakup of the Soviet Union. The U.S. was the 37th nation to recognize the independence of the Baltic States. Bush's support of Boris Yeltsin, Russia's first democratically elected president, has hardly moved beyond simple rhetoric.

Everyone points to the war with Iraq as the shining moment of the hopefully soon-to-be-over Bush era. Indeed, America proved itself to be the preeminent military power in the world, and those in the armed services deserve high praise. But it is now evident that Saddam Hussein was a demon created largely by Western design. Loans and technology transfers were among the shopping cart full of loot used to court Hussein in the war with Iran. And then after the Gulf War, the ruling hierarchy of Kuwait, which the U.S. had just "liberated," again denied that country democratic

Yesterday's ceremony in San Antonio highlights perhaps the most tragic failing of the Bush foreign desk. The president has realized four years too late that foreign policy and the domestic policy are interrelated on a vast scale. The only links Bush has made so far between here and abroad economically are tax breaks for companies exporting plants overseas which costs jobs here at home. Since the Bush administration has callously allowed jobs to escape overseas before NAFTA, the agreement as it now stands probably means more of the Exporting jobs stands as a sign of where the Bush administration's domestic priorities lie as well. Foreign labor markets mean cheaper production costs for U.S. corporations. This generates higher profit margins. In turn, quarterly reports look rosier and the value of the company's stock increases.

Despite the improved fortunes of companies and shareholders, this cycle undermines the economy at large. Demand on the domestic front dries up as fewer people have jobs. Corporations may have better earnings, but their original markets deteriorate with each job

Clinton agrees with the need for NAFTA, but not at the expense of hundreds of thousands of U.S. jobs. He faces the reality that foreign policy has largely moved beyond the bipolar, balance of power era of the last 40

The ballgame is dominated by economic factors now. That means the U.S. must be actively engaged not only with Canada and Mexico, but with industrial and developing nations worldwide in expanding trade. More global trade results in a better economy at home.

On security issues, Clinton will ensure that the nation's military strength is not reduced as defense spending is scaled down by relying on a more mobile military. Displaced defense workers will be offered

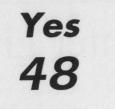

Meanwhile, a Clinton administration will work for democracy worldwide instead of status quo situations as America is the most important player in international relations. Maintaining that role automatically calls for a strong, economically oriented foreign policy. And that means voting for Bill Clinton.

Unilateral power to control global economy wanes

NAFTA essential to share world market

The world economy is currently making a transition from a unilateral to multilateral order. This transition is being touted as potentially significant to world peace as the end of the Cold War.

Unilateralism refers to the United States acting as the chief lender of the globe. Our economy has begun to fall as a result of these hegemonic responsibilities; we can no longer act as the sole economic power. In the early 1970s, Germany and Japan acted with the United States as trilateral powers; however, according to the World Policy Journal, this policy ended in the late 1970s when the United States again asserted its unilateral role. The problem is that this unilateral role has built up a huge deficit. Currently, the exchange rate for the dollar has decreased to levels that prove our nation no longer has the ability to be the governing economic power of the

An example of this is the Persian Gulf War. Our government had the military clout to fight a war, but we did not have the funds.

Germany and Japan were large contributors of money towards the Gulf crisis and are recognized as other economic superpowers. Yet they are facing a long period of slower growth and are raking the world for capital to provide for their own domestic and regional

In essence, no single nation has the power to reinvigorate the global economy. The current solution for this problem is economic treaties. The Europeans are working toward a unified economic state with a common currency and interest rates. The treaty governing this is the

In the Americas, we have the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA), which will allow for free trade between the United States, Canada and Mexico. This will later extend into South America. For example, Chile is also being considered for free trade, and North American companies are beginning to search for business Getting countries to agree to work together as economic entities is not a simple process. Europe has to face the issues of pride and mistrust that have arisen from centuries of wars and separate interests. At home we have to face the problem of isolationist pride.

Many people in the United States wouldn't know what NAFTA is if asked, and if they did would probably express some fear of losing Losing jobs to Mexico is not a reasonable argument for avoiding economic free trade.

As a point of fact, note that the best Ford plant in the world is located in Mexico.

As for the notion of buying American, that is a term that needs to be qualified. Often clothes that are "Made in America" are made of foreign material. Cars that are "American" cars do not have to be fully made in America or fully made of "American" parts. They simply have to pass percentage requirements.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Higher values

I was pleased to see the reaction to the antihomosexual graffiti.

One letter mentioned "family values." I'm sure that outwardly Bush and Quayle would protest such hate graffiti, yet they just don't get it. Their "family values" definition encourages such hate by breeding unnecessary fear. We argue about who has the best economic plan, and we forget that we are all God's children; my attitudes and behavior affect all of

I pray for those who feel the need to hate. They are much more sicker than those with AIDS. Spiritual health is so much more precious than bodily health. How many of you claim to be "tolerant" of homosexuality, yet are just as cowardly about voicing your opinion? "It's okay to be gay, just don't flaunt it." Do you mean holding hands? Then look around, you'll see many straight people "flaunting" their heterosexuality.

A society that supports hiding people who make us uncomfortable thereby supports hatred that is bound to emerge. You're outraged at the hate messages, and you should be. But do something about it. If society allowed people to be who they are, then those who hate wouldn't have the courage to express this hate at all, anonymously or otherwise.

Do you want to see some real courage? Visit an AIDS clinic. Do you want to see a demonstration of family values? Take a look at how the gay community has shown an incredible amount of love, respect and support for its dying brothers and sisters, many of whom have been rejected by their families for wanting to live the lives that God created them to lead

NAFTA forum

On Wednesday, the United States, Canada and Mexico embarked on an historic journey toward creating the largest free-trade bloc in It is amazing how little anyone - be they Canadian, Mexican or American - knows about the North American Free Trade Agreement. It is nearly impossible to overestimate the dramatic effect this treaty will have on the North American continent should it be ratified by Congress next year. This is an agreement that TCU students in particular should not take lightly; NAFTA will affect job availability and the economy in general for years to come.

Ten Mexican students from the University of the Americas in Puebla, Mexico, have come to TCU to discuss NAFTA and what the future will hold for all of us. Three forums will be held that are open to all TCU students. The first will be held today at 1:30 p.m. in Dan Rogers Room 134. This meeting will include business and community leaders from the Metroplex. There will be two more forums on Friday, at 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. in Moudy 141N. I encourage as many TCU students to attend as

Grant encourages minorities to get TCU education

By LISA SILVER TCU Daily Skiff

The university has been awarded over $400,000 for the next three years by the U.S. Department of Education as a part of the Ron E. McNair Baccalaureate Achievement Grant.

The purpose of the grant is to encourage minorities, females and males in under-represented fields to get a bachelor's, master's or doctorate degree, said Charles V. Latham, special programs director of the School of Education.

The grant was created in honor of Ron E. McNair, an astronaut killed in the space shuttle Challenger explosion, Latham said. McNair had previously been a college professor, he said.

Undergraduate juniors and seniors of a minority, or in an under-represented field such as males in elementary education or females in physics are eligible, Latham said.

Students must meet income requirements and must have "first generation status," which means that neither parent may have a bachelor's degree, he said.

The university is funded for 20 students a year, 14 or 15 of which must meet both of the requirements, Latham said. One third of the students can meet only one requirement, said.

Students are identified as possible participants by faculty and staff members and are encouraged to apply, Latham said. The nominating faculty or staff member then applies to be a "mentor" for the student, he

Students and mentors work together, building a relationship and allowing the student to see what a faculty member does, Latham said. The student and mentor then work on a research project, he said.

This is the first year of the three year program, he said. It is not definite how the program is going to work, but the purpose is clear: to encourage students to earn a degree with the goal of getting students to become faculty members of a school,

Once in the program, students may remain in the program until they receive a Ph.D. or leave the university, Latham said. Students are generally chosen from the university, but graduates with bachelor's degrees from other schools are eligible if they don't take a break between undergraduate and graduate school, he

Dally CEO to speak to university ad club

By SHU XIE TCU Daily Skiff

Scott Dally, president and CEO of the Fort Worth-based Dally Advertising agency, will be the featured speaker at tonight's meeting of Alpha Delta Sigma, the university's ad club.

"It's really an honor to have such an important figure in the advertising business come speak to us," said Ad Club President Kevin Gardner. "He's built a nationwide reputation in a short period of time and there's a lot to be said for that. There's a lot to be learned from it, too."

A family run business, Dally Advertising was founded in 1959 by Dally's father, Del. Dally, who started out by running errands, began helping the family business in 1970. Four years later, Dally became creative director, president and CEO of the agency.

Since Dally took over the agency in 1974, it has enjoyed a great amount of growth and success. Dally said. Besides increased billings of 800 percent, the agency has won numerous regional and national awards, including Telly, TOPS, and Fort Worth ADDY awards, he said.

"The Telly awards are national awards for spot television advertising creativity," he said. "TOPS is an award given by the Advertising League and agencies from all over the Southwest compete. In the ADDY awards, which were held in February or March, we took home 39 gold (awards) and 70 total, including the best of show. The last record was around 40 awards also set by us, so we broke our own

When asked what he believed have been his most important contribution so far into the world of advertising, Dally said the fact he has trained a tremendous amount of new talent seems to be the most out of college. We have an extensive internship program," he said. "Presently, we have at least half a dozen TCU students as interns."

Currently serving about 50 clients, Dally advertising provides a full-service advertising agency for the Southwest region, Dally said. The agency has provided advertising for various industries and in forms of print, billboard and television, he said.

Through many of his success stories, Dally said he believes it is very important to focus on one goal and go after that goal.

"In my speech (to the Ad Club), I plan to talk about tenacity, tunnel vision, singlemindedness and dedication," Dally said. "Never say never. This is especially important since the market is getting more qualitative and quantitative. Creativity will be especially important in the coming years."

"It's really thrilling that someone as prominent in the ad commutive talents) even before they get nity as Scott is willing to take the time and share some of his insight with TCU students," said Jack Raskopf, faculty adviser to the TCU Ad Club. "It's been a while since anyone of this caliber came to speak to Ad Club."

Gardner said Dally's talk is a sense of things to come in the Ad Club, a part of the American Advertising Federation. It also works toward achieving the purpose of the AAF, he said.

"One of the primary objectives of the AAF is to encourage young people to enter advertising as a career and to enhance the quality of advertising education, thus strengthening the skills of future advertising practitioners," Gardner said. "And college chapters help to serve that purpose."

The TCU Ad Club will meet at 5:30 p.m. today in Moudy Building

After the weekend that the TCU men's soccer team endured, a small break was well deserved.

However, the breather will be short lived, as the Horned Frogs leap back into action against DePaul on Friday at 2:30 p.m. at the TCU soc-

On Friday against the Blue Demons, the Horned Frogs will discover just how much they have benefitted from the tiring experience.

"It's going to be an interesting test for us because we've never played them before," TCU head soccer coach David Rubinson said.

Despite little knowledge of the upcoming opponent, Rubinson does have a strategy in mind.

"We need to learn to not spend all of our energy in the first half," out and having great first halves, but we still need to have something left for the second half."

The Frogs' loss to Incarnate Word proved Rubinson's point, as TCU was down by only one at halftime. Then the floodgates opened, as the Frogs were blitzed for five goals in the final thirty minutes.

"In the second half it just seemed like they were drumming us," senior midfielder Joe Malachino said. "We were just standing around, and we quit possessing the ball."

The blowout was a close contest early in the game though. Had the Frogs been awarded a first half goal that was nullified by the referee, the contest may have seen a different result.

"The ball hit the crossbar and went down, but the referee ruled no goal," Rubinson said. "If we had scored that one goal, the score is 1-1 going into the second half, and I think it's a different game."

However, Rubinson felt the consecutive games were probably a bigger factor in TCU's loss than the

"But, the main thing was that we couldn't get up (to play) back to back (games). Our guys were not ready to play. We were just dead," Rubinson said. "I think this shows that we are not as mature as we need to be and possibly not as fit as we need to be."

In fairness, the Incarnate Word match did follow an emotional victory over Pan American, played on the previous day. In that game, the Horned Frogs needed all the energy they could muster to rally from a 1-0 first half deficit and send the game into overtime on a goal by junior Tony Marrero.

The first overtime period yielded no goals, but in the second overtime, tory total from a year ago.

The Horned Frogs will look to shut down the Baylor running game Saturday night, just like they did in last week's 13-11 victory over Oklahoma State.

Matt Thornburg and Malachino both scored, providing the difference in the extended event.

"I think the (Pan American) game took a lot out of us," Malachino said. "That showed in the second half (of the Incarnate Word match). We were just a step slow throughout the entire game."

However, what the overtime win took out of TCU in energy, it replaced with confidence. The victory marked a two game win streak for the Frogs, as it downed Texas Wesleyan 2-1 last Wednesday. Midfielders Brian Lauterjung and Malachino scored the goals.

The Horned Frogs will look for some more positive results on Friday when they face the Blue Demons. At 4-6, TCU has already eclipsed its vic-

Eagles defense crushes Aikman and Cowboys

By TY BENZ TCU Sports Columnist

Excuse me while I continue to gloat about Monday night's massacre — I mean game.

The Eagles 31-7 blowout over the Cowboys proved one important thing: the Cowboys still have a way to go before I consider them a Super Bowl contender.

Now before I get lynched by all you Dallas fans, let me tell you the main reason behind my thinking: the road to the Super Bowl this season leads through Philly. And we all know what happens when the Cowboys play in Philadelphia. Monday night was just another clear example

One word sums up Dallas's offensive performance...SPLAT!

The Gang Green Philly defense pummelled and pounded Troy Aikman and company into submission. But this shouldn't surprise anyone. The Eagles D has owned the Cowboys (and the entire NFL) the last couple of years.

Look at the defense and it clearly is the league's best. The Eagles have two All-Pros in the front four (Reggie White and Clyde Simmons), a dominating linebacker (Seth Joyner), and a cornerback whose is as sticky as super glue (Eric Allen). What do all these great players add up to? Big plays that result in turnovers.

This feature of the opportunistic Philadelphia defense is the reason why opposing teams enter Veterans momentum back into their favor.

Look at Monday's game as an example. The first series of the game. Cowboys ball and presto — turnover and then an Eagles touchdown.

Poof...that let the air out of the Cowboys sails and gave the Eagles a lead they would never relinquish.

The Eagles D is so dominating because of one reason. It forces opposing teams to throw against a tremendous pass rush. It does this by stuffing the run. The last time an opposing runner rushed for over a 100 yards was in 1989. After the running game is shut down, Philly sicks a tremendous pass rush on opposing quarterbacks that forces opposing Ouarterbacks to make quick, decisive reads.

And most of the time, they can't. More importantly, Dallas Quarterback Troy Aikman hasn't shown the ability to do so against the Eagles. After Monday's night's shellacking, Aikman is now 0-6 against Philadelphia and has thrown only three touchdown passes while tossing 10 interceptions. If the Cowboys are going to win in Philly, Aikman must find the cure to his personal Philadelphia hex. The main reason the Cowboys lost Monday was because of Aikman's four interceptions.

But the blame shouldn't fall completely on Aikman's shoulders. Tight end Jay Novacek dropped five passes (clearly his holdout is affecting his play), and Michael Irvin was invisible. Other than his spectacular onehanded grab, Allen shut Irvin down.

And what about Emmitt Smith? The only thing he did all night long was complain to the refs about late hits. He was a non-factor, forcing the offense to go to the air way to often.

Cowboy supporters say that the offense just had a bad game, my answer is simple. Have the Cowboys ever had a good day on offense against this Eagle defense? The answer is a resounding NO, the Eagles D just flat kicked Dallas's

But perhaps the biggest reason why I don't think Dallas will go to the Super Bowl is clear...the defense hasn't made any big plays and simply doesn't have a big time player. Cowboy defensive backs dropped not one, but two interceptions Monday night. Free safety Ray Horton (soon to be an ex-Cowboy when Thomas Everett learns the secondary coverages) dropped an interception in the end zone, and Philly scored later. Kenny Gant dropped one interception when all he had was turf in front of him. This inability to make the big play doesn't stop in just the secondary.

Up front, it isn't too different. Charles Haley hasn't been the pass rushing force that everyone expected. He has only one sack this season, and the defensive tackles have played hurt all year long, hampering their performance. The pass rush has been inconsistent all season

Despite a decent game Monday (other than Herschel Walker's big day) the defense has had trouble all season long, making the Cowboys vulnerable. Hell, even the impotent hex of trying to repeat as Super Bowl champions. The other two wins were against really bad teams; the Giants and Phoenix. What does all this mean? That Dallas's only competition in the NFC East is Philly, and

North American countries initial free trade agreement

By KELLEY SHANNON Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — President Bush joined the leaders of Mexico and Canada for a North American free trade agreement ceremony Wednesday in the political battleground of Bush's adopted home state.

"We are creating the largest, richest and most productive market in the entire world," Bush said. "If anyone doubts the importance of trade for creating jobs, they should come to this great state — come to the Lone Star State."

Bush, Mexican President Carlos Salinas de Gortari and Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney watched their trade ambassadors initial the 2,000page agreement in an afternoon ceremony in a shady, historic downtown courtyard.

On a nearby street corner about 200 people, including Bush supporters and trade agreement opponents, held signs and chanted political slogans.

Bush said Texas already has seen the benefits of trade with Mexico. In 1991, he said, Texas exports totaled $47 billion. Of that, about $15 billion went to Mexico.

The NAFTA accord, completed in August, would remove all barriers among the United States, Mexico and Canada over 15 years. Bush cannot sign the agreement until Dec. 17, according to congressional procedures governing the treaty.

The pact is subject to ratification by the national legislatures of the three countries. The U.S. Congress is not expect to consider it until at least next spring.

Republicans and Democrats said South Texas and East Texas will be regions of Bush's adopted home state where Democratic nominee Bill Clinton will try to take votes from the president.

White House officials acknowledged an initialing ceremony was not held in 1988 prior to the approval of the free trade agreement with Canada.

"It's a photo opportunity because they're not even signing it," said former California governor Jerry Brown, who protested in San Antonio with other free trade agreement opponents. "In so many ways, this is George Bush's last hurrah."

Brown and labor and farm worker leaders said the free trade agreement would eliminate American jobs, reduce wages and lead to more pollution. Brown said a "super government" of trade panels from the three countries could overrule state labor and environmental regulations.

"Some of NAFTA's critics will fight the future — throw obstacles in the way of this agreement and mask a policy of protectionism," he said. "But history shows us that any nation that raises walls and turns inward is destined only for decline."

Salinas said the pact is crucial to competing in changing international markets.

"Through the agreement, North America is preparing itself to face the economic challenges of the future, because it will bolster the competitive capability of the region and of each of our nations." Salinas said.

Mulroney said geography has forced the three countries to be neighbors and the agreement will make them economic partners.

San Antonio business and political leaders witnessed the ceremony. American, Mexican and Canadian flags decorated downtown streets, and city officials handed out packets promoting San Antonio's ties with Mexico.

It was the third international event of the year in San Antonio that civic leaders say spotlight the city as America's free trade center.

Earlier this year, Bush, Salinas and the leaders of five other Latin American countries met here for an anti-drug summit that city leaders said portrayed San Antonio as an international city.

Late last month, Southwestern Bell Corp. announced it is moving its 500-person corporate headquarters from St. Louis to San Antonio, partly because of the company's growing telecommunications business in Mexico.

Senior learns leadership with TCU's ROTC program

By MICHAEL ROWETT TCU Daily Skiff

Curtis Martin has learned a lot about leadership as deputy cadet commander of the university's Air Force ROTC.

Martin, a senior Spanish/sociology double major, is responsible as deputy commander for ensuring everything runs smoothly in the wake of restructuring changes.

"I take the temperature of the corps, so to speak," he said. "I make sure everyone's positive, people are learning things and everyone feels they're being treated fairly."

Martin oversees many aspects of corps life as a result of the changes. He directly supervises cadets in key responsibilities, such as safety at corps events and morale and retention.

The changes have resulted in greater leadership opportunities for more cadets, Martin said.

"Last year, a few cadets were involved in everything," he said. "A lot of people underneath weren't getting the chance to learn and apply leadership skills and show their abilities. Now they can."

For example, recruiting had previously been done by the deputy commander, Martin said. As a result of the changes, a separate cadet position for this purpose has been established. "Now there are more cadets with

"Now more cadets can learn to supervise, lead and motivate others."

In addition, the university's detachment has added an interper-leadership responsibilities," he said.

detachment has added an interpersonal facet to the program.

"Instead of (Air Force) ROTC being a place where you could learn to lead, it was one where you were expected to know how," Martin said. "There wasn't an opportunity to learn from your mistakes."

The faculty now approaches the program as a training environment, Martin said. Cadets are not encouraged to make a lot of mistakes, but are given plenty of opportunities to learn from them.

Martin said his responsibilities as deputy commander, which began this semester, have only been one facet of his years with the corps.

He was Cadet of the Month and Cadet of the Semester during his freshman year, and was Cadet of the Year his sophomore year, he said.

Cadets must have been Cadet of the Month and Cadet of the Semester to be considered for Cadet of the Year, Martin said. In addition, they must be nominated by a faculty member and are asked questions by superiors under a high-level discipline situation, he said.

Martin said he attended a fourweek training camp between his sophomore and junior years. Since he is from Colorado Springs, Colo., he requested assignment at Lowry Air Force Base in Denver, he said.

Martin overcame adversity at camp to win top honors in survival training exercises in the Rocky Mountains, he said. He sprained his ankle prior to the event and was on crutches for several weeks, he said. Afterwards, he said he went through the training exercises anyway, and ended up winning the Athletics Award for High Physical Fitness.

"It hurt a lot," Martin said. "No one was forcing me to do it. You learn the type of motivation to endure things and take things in stride in the Air Force."

As a result of his experiences at camp, he said he was chosen as the recipient of the Professor of Aerospace Studies Award, given by the chairperson of the department to the most outstanding junior cadet.

Most recently, Martin spent two weeks this summer at a Professional Development Course (PDP). He spent time with active duty officers to learn what active duty would be like.

Martin also rode in a KC-135 refueling plane. During his flight it refueled B-1 bombers. He also flew in a T-37 during his training camp between his sophomore and junior years. However, Martin said he does not feel a career as a pilot would suit him.

"I'm not much of a pilot," he said.
"Everyone has that stereotype that all Air Force officers are pilots, but I never wanted to be a pilot. There are so many more opportunities."

Martin will go into active duty

Martin will go into active duty next year as a second lieutenant. He has agreed to be a missile launch officer. However, this is not his ultimate goal, he said.

"I was allocated as a missile launch officer under the terms of my three-year scholarship," he said. "However, I'm trying to keep my physical fitness as well as my grades really high so I'll have a better chance of getting into something else."

Martin eventually wants to go into space operations or intelligence, he said.

"I feel these fields would better serve my majors, especially in sociology," he said. "I've learned why people do what they do based on their environment. It's something I can use to see how people I'm supposedly leading are going to react to certain circumstances."

Martin would like to be stationed in a warm climate, or ideally overseas, he said.

"I'd love to be stationed in Spain, since I speak Spanish," he said. "Spanish is the type of language that if you don't use it, you lose it."

Martin said his future occupation is relatively secure despite more potential defense cuts.

One way the Air Force is cutting back is through the Reduction In Force (RIF) program, he said. Officers such as first lieutenants and captains are eligible for it, and some are being asked to retire, he said.

"There's always a chance I might be cut, but I'm not losing any sleep over it," he said. "There's a lot of things you learn in the Air Force that you can apply to everyday life. One of them is to be flexible and to take things in stride."

In addition to his corps activities, Martin is active in the university chapter of Campus Crusade for Christ. He serves as the master of ceremonies for the organization's weekly meetings, and leads a bible study group with 10 members.

While in the Air Force, Martin said he wants to go into a program called Military Ministry.

"I want to minister to the people around me," he said. "I'm going into the military to serve my country and pay for school, but I also want to make a difference and improve the quality of the people in the Air Force."

"I've learned that to lead anyone, you have to serve them first," Martin said. "No one wants to follow someone who only tells them what to do. If you're not serving people you want to lead, you're dragging them, not leading them. I want to be a different kind of leader."
