Is it the Boise State Broncos who managed to go undefeated and upset the touted Oklahoma Sooners?

Or what about the Wisconsin Badgers who worked their way through the pollsters' hearts with a 12-1 season?

Complaints that continually fuel fans with watercooler discussions and uninformed debates range from how Florida head coach Urban Meyer supposedly lobbied for a berth in the national championship to why does the BCS exist while Division 1-AA schools have a playoff bracket?

Last fall, during a press conference, TCU head coach Gary Patterson explained the benefits of the BCS and how bowl games are a prize for the competitors rather than a tournament, which is a rather merciless approach toward the college football post season. "It's a reward for the athletes and all their hard work," Patterson said. "A tournament does not really give that chance.'

The privilege to play in a bowl game sometimes is squandered by the tournament style when a team does not have the opportunity to get to explore the city and enjoy the fun that comes with playing with the whole team in a new situation, Patterson said.

The BCS may be a flawed system with a computerized ranking system, but the top two picks still come down to a coach's choice.

Similar to a student council election, promising to vote for somebody does not ensure a vote, so complaining about Meyer does not change the fact that the other NCAA Division I football coaches felt his Gators were the best pick to take on the Ohio State Buckeyes in the BCS National Championship.

Similar to any pee-wee football coach's philosophy, the best way to beat a team is on the scoreboard, and 41-14 is a definite statement of who deserves to be atop the Real world not something to be feared after college

"This is the true story of seven strangers picked to live in a house and have their lives taped." This is "The Real World." But this definition of the chapter of our lives only works for those seven people. What is the real world for the rest of us? Because, aside from potluck dorm assignments, it is unlikely that any of us will live with strangers, let alone have our encounters filmed.

notoriously feared COMMENTARY

Before college, there was a lot of pressure to gain those "real world" skills - survival instincts that would allow you to make it on your own. When it comes down to it, that is the preconceived notion of the real world: an environment in which you are the only one who can help yourself, while the rest of society is out to get you. Fast-forward to the present.

Attending TCU, you have an abundance of resources at your fingertips, nearly 24 hours a day and all on 250 easily accessible acres. Is this the real world? It would seem not, considering the unlimited opportunity to explore the world with the safety and support of a university campus. Perhaps we enter the real world upon graduation. About the future, I obviously cannot speak from personal experience, but I can at least elaborate on why the present does not really seem like "the real world" it was cracked up to be. I do not see how the cosmic forces of the universe are working against me. As a college student, I never have to lift a finger to cook anything besides Easy Mac, and, even though my student account is in my name, bills still get sent home to my parents.

I would say it is a charmed life. Leading us again to the same conclusion: that the real world is out there somewhere, waiting for us to fall into its hungry trap. We seem to always be led to this conclusion about the real world as the future - that we have it good now and it is going to get worse.

I have provided you with humorous mental images and exaggerated generalizations, I know, but think about it. Your high school teachers told you that professors were not going to babysit you regarding behavior or assignments. Your college mentors warn you against the frivolous antics of future bosses. In your early days in the workforce, friends and peers will advise you about preparing to care for a family, and toward the end of them, you are told to gear up for retirement.

In every scenario, it seems as though some luxury is taken away from us and/or some hurdle is added to our lives. We seem to be bred with the idea that the real world is a negative entity and something to fear.

I think the real world is making the most of the resources we have and being aware that they may not be there tomorrow. For our own sanity, we need to shake the notion that the real world is the point of no return and maybe even let go of the idea that it is a place and accept that it is an attitude - a mature state of mind in which we are ready to take on the world and all its demons but not lose sight of the angels before us.

Anahita Kalianivala is a freshman English and psychology major from Fort Worth. Her column appears every Tuesday.

Graduation in four years less feasible

For most college students, the expectation of graduating in four years seems feasible. Just schedule your classes accordingly, and you're in and out before you know it.

But what happens when you decide your dream of being a heart surgeon really isn't in your heart at all? And what about those who decide to broaden their horizons and discover the world with a whirlwind semester studying abroad?

There's also those who partied a little too hard, studied not quite enough, had a lack of adequate funds or had a family crisis.

I could go on and on with an endless array of situations, but one can easily see how those eight semesters quickly turn into the unexpected 10 or 12.

Provost Nowell Donovan said TCU wants to do all it can in order for students to graduate in four years. However, he has seen a rising number in students who stay longer.

"Super seniors," as they are affectionately called, are more popular than one may think.

A four-year college experience is no longer the norm, according to CNNMoney.com.

It reported in 2004 that only 37 percent of first-time freshmen entering four-year bachelor'sdegree programs actually complete their degrees within four years.

Another 26 percent take either five or six years. And the remaining 37 percent either don't get their degrees at all or complete their coursework in more than six years.

But the four-year plan is not impossible to achieve.

By enrolling in summer school, meeting with academic advisers early on and taking a full load of classes throughout your college career, you will be much closer to wearing your cap and gown.

And with the pressure of Mom and Dad, who often foot the bill, some students have hurried through their education for fear of being cut off financially. But parents must remember that college is a time period when their children are challenged with more than tests. The responsibilities can be overwhelming to a young adult.

As colleges place more demands and continually raise tuition, it becomes more difficult for a 20-year-old student to be a super hero. But it's real easy to become a "super senior."

Amy Kopsea graduated in the fall of 2006 with a broadcast jornalism degree. She is from Osceola, Ind.

According to the Star-Telegram, any university considering Patterson would have to pay

TCU $1 million — the price the school has set as his buyout.

Minnesota Gophers head coach Mason was fired Dec. 31 two days after a devastating overtime loss to the Texas Tech Red Raiders in the Bus company owner gets 12-month sentence

By MICHAEL GRABELL The Dallas Morning News

A south Texas bus company owner was sentenced Wednesday to six months in a halfway house and six months of home confinement for failing to maintain his buses in the months prior to one of them bursting into flames outside Dallas, which killed 23 nursing home patients during the Hurricane Rita evacuation.

Jim Maples, a former NFL player who ran Global Limo, will be allowed to work during that time and the rest of his five years' probation. But he must quit his job with a bus company and can't work in the transportation business without approval from the court, U.S. District Judge Ricardo Hinojosa ruled.

"It is no way to run a business to endanger the individuals who are placing trust in a carrier," the judge said in imposing his sentence. "When someone says 'I'll ride your bus or airplane or taxicab,' we all say when we do this, 'I'm entrusting my life to your good conscience."

Maples wrote in a letter to the court that he accepts full responsibility for the violations but believes that his safety consultant did not do an adequate job ensuring that he complied with federal regulations.

He declined to speak on his own behalf during the hearing because he had been told by his civil lawyer that it could affect pending lawsuits, said his criminal defense attorney, Charles Banker.

Maples' involvement with a new bus company, Universal Tours, was discussed at length during the sentencing hearing. The tour business is run out of Global's old office and is using one of the Global buses that was temporarily ordered off the road by federal regulators after the September 2005 fire.

Federal prosecutor Juan Alanis noted that Universal Tours also plans to employ some of Global's old drivers and has hired the same safety consultant that Maples expressed dissatisfaction with in his letter to the court

"He has shown a callous disregard for the safety regulations," Alanis said. "He's putting himself in the same situation where this could happen again."

Alanis said that Maples was going to drive buses in addition to being a sales manager for Universal Tours. But in what Judge Hinojosa called "a Perry Mason moment," Universal Tours owner Manfred Wallner shouted from the back of the court, "That is not true!"

"He made it very clear he could have nothing to do with the buses," Wallner said after being called to testify.

Still, Judge Hinojosa struggled with what sentence to give Maples because the government provided no other case in which someone was criminally prosecuted for failing to maintain a bus.

In addition to having to live in a halfway house and wear an electronic leg monitor during his home confinement, Mr. Maples must pay a $10,000 fine. Global was fined $100,000. He and his company could have been fined up to $1.1 million.

Federal investigators have blamed the bus fire on a lack of lubrication of the wheel bearings, caused by poor maintenance by Global and the failure of drivers to inspect the bus.

JIM MAHONEY / Dallas Morning New

Blue tarps cover the bodies of victims who were in a bus that caught fire on northbound I-45 near Beltline Road outside Dallas on Sept. 23, 2005. The bus, which was carrying elderly Hurricane Rita evacuees from the Houston area, burst into flames outside Dallas before dawn, killing at least 24 people trapped inside, officials said.

The bearings overheated as the bus sat in 15 hours of traffic from Houston to Dallas and eventually ignited the tire on Interstate 45 outside Wilmer. The fire then spread to the cabin, which contained several oxygen canisters and 37 elderly patients, many of them frail and unable to walk.

After the accident, federal regulators inspected Global's operations and shut it down after finding 168 violations of bus safety laws.

The bus fire was the deadliest incident tied to Hurricane Rita. It has spawned numerous lawsuits, a revamp of nursing home evacuation procedures and a congressional inquiry into how well the U.S. Department of Transportation monitors bus companies.

The National Transportation Safety Board is expected to release its final ruling and recommendations about the bus fire early this year.

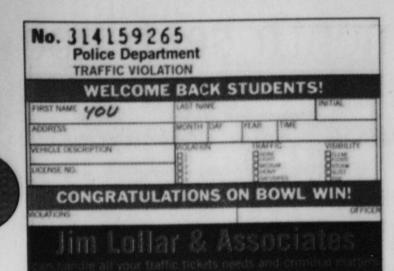

Government prosecutors were prohibited from mentioning the bus fire to the jury during the trial in early October because their indictment failed to tie the poor maintenance to the accident. The prosecutors said they thought they couldn't include violations that led to the bus fire because some regulations had been waived for the evacuations related to Hurricane Katrina and Hurricane Rita.

Maples was found guilty only on misdemeanors of failing to maintain his buses and not filling out required inspection reports. He was acquitted on a more serious charge of conspiring with drivers to falsify logbooks, which are required by regulators to ensure that drivers don't fall asleep at the wheel. A conviction on that charge would have meant a sentence of up to five years in prison.

First book superstore in county to close after 13 years

Fort Worth Star-Telegram

Borders Group is closing the store it opened more than 13 years ago on South Hulen Street at Interstate 20,

BILLY WESSELS / Photo Editor The Borders Books and Music store on Hulen near 1-20 was the first Borders to open in scheduling a Jan. 20 shutdown of the first book superstore to come to Tarrant County and one of the first 50 stores in the Borders chain.

The shopping center that includes the location at 4613 S. Hulen St. had become a problem, said Ann Binkley, a spokeswoman for the Ann Arbor, Mich.-based retailer.

"As leases come up, we have to look to see if the property is still viable, and quite honestly, with that location, the center is old and other tenants have left, and it no longer is a viable location," Binkley said.

A call to the James Parkinson Family Trust in Corona del Mar, Calif., which owns the South Hulen property, according to Tarrant County records, wasn't immediately returned.

Local customers with Borders membership cards were notified of the closing via e-mail late Wednesday. The store has about two dozen employees. Binkley said workers will be offered positions at a new Borders set to open in April at the Arlington Highlands shopping center along I-20, and some staff members may be able to transfer to existing stores.

The company has a total of six Tarrant County locations, including its Borders and Waldenbooks chains. Borders opened a store in 2000 at the Chapel Hill shopping center at Hulen Street and Interstate 30.

Even though the Chapel Hill center is less than four miles from the closing Borders, the stores co-existed for six years, indicating that the second store did not cannibalize the first.

But over the years, the original Hulen location, which is near a Linens 'n Things and a Ross Dress for Less, had to weather drastic changes in the development of the Hulen shopping corridor and in the competitive landscape of the bookselling industry.

As newer shopping centers began to spring up around the Hulen Mall, the facade and the red block lettering on the sign in front of the Borders store began to look dated. In mid-2005, Barnes & Noble opened at a strip center at Hulen Street and Overton Ridge Boulevard. A Half Price Books shop is nearby, farther south on the street.

Borders is coming off a difficult holiday-shopping season. A fierce price battle with Barnes & Noble and Amazon.com cut into profit margins, and sales for the year's final quarter didn't meet expectations. But Binkley waved off the suggestion that the arrival of the Barnes & Noble on Hulen Street and Overton Ridge hastened the decline in business at the Borders that will be closed.

"We co-exist not just with Barnes & Noble but with large independents all over the country," she said. "This (store closing) was due to the cen-

Tarrant County.

Paula Batts, of Fort Worth, wants her two sons to be safe.

But she knows there's only so much she can do to protect them from some things.

That's why she can't oppose a looming congressional proposal to reinstate the draft, a plan that could someday put both Michael, 13, and Nathan, 10, at risk

"I wouldn't be eager for my children to rush off into harm's way," Batts said. "You work all your life to keep them safe. But we know the freedoms we do enjoy come at a price.

"I guess I could reluctantly support a draft if they thought it was absolutely necessary to keep our country safe," she said. "Would we be the first to sign up? Probably not."

A Democratic congressman from New York has announced plans to file a proposal to reinstate the military draft, makwith very few exemptions.

U.S. Rep. Charles Rangel said his plan, which comes as President Bush is calling for an expanded military, could deter control Congress and Rangel politicians from starting wars because their children could be at risk of fighting.

"I believe it is immoral for those who insist on continuing the conflict in Iraq, and placing war on the table in Iran and North Korea, to do so only at the risk of other people's children," said Rangel, the new chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. "If there must be a sacrifice, then the burden must be shared fairly.'

Rangel filed a similar proposal in 2003, to make men and women between 18 and 26 eligible for the draft. And he offered another plan last year, bringing back the draft. to require military service for people between 18 and 42.

Both plans died, and he even voted against his own first proposal in 2004, encouraging fellow Democrats to follow suit, because, ing men and women 18 to 42 he said, Republicans were trying years old eligible for service, to use the bill to avoid questions about the war in Iraq.

Political observers say Rangel's proposal should get some air time, since Democrats will heads a powerful committee.

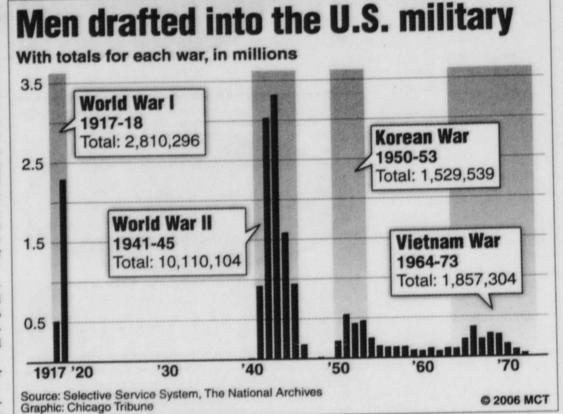

"He is thinking that in the absence of a draft, it's mostly the poor and minorities who end up in the military doing the country's fighting," said Cal Jillson, a political science professor at Southern Methodist University. "He thinks there's merit of having more of a broader cross-section of people fighting the battles.

"And if more wealthy, comfortable people's sons and daughters were exposed to (war) ... the elites of the country would be more careful about going to war."

Polls show little support for

In 2005, seven in 10 Americans said they didn't want to see the draft return. And even former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld said then that "there isn't a chance in the world that the draft will be brought back."

"It's a really bad move," said

Emory "Captain Trip" Bellard III, a co-host of the nationally syndicated radio show "Troop Talk." "We have the most professional fighting force in the unteer force.

"I don't think in this very intense conflict that putting people where they are going to serve overseas against their cent of new Army recruits in will is the way to go," Bellard 2006 had high school diplosaid. "This takes extremely professional and well-trained

With Shawn Hornbeck and Ben Ownby safe at home with their families, authorities on Sunday turned to their next most pressing task - getting some answers.

Exactly how did the two teens end up in the Kirkwood, Mo., apartment of pizzeria manager Michael J. Devlin?

What were his intentions for them? Did he harm them? And why did Shawn stay with him for four years, apparently posing as his son, while his real family pleaded for his return?

Investigators interviewed both boys Saturday, but the public will have to wait for any insight into the ordeals they faced. Franklin County Sheriff Gary Toelke said Sunday that he could not disclose anything that was discussed.

NASA advances plans for scientific outpost | An outpost on the moon

By JEREMY MANIER

Chicago Tribune NASA's evolving plans for building a permanent moon base by 2024 portray the facility as a scientific outpost where astronauts will build telescopes, forage for rare minerals and prepare launched from the lunar surface.

But the reality is likely to be program. far more modest, many scientists say, with few tangible scientific benefits in the short term. Some researchers who support the ogy, who see a chance to finally return to the moon argue that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration should downplay any potential scientific payoff and focus instead on the sheer adventure of people exploring and living on new worlds.

The rationale - and cost - of President Bush's proposed moon base will be among the first priorities for the new Democratic leaders of the congressional committees that oversee NASA's budget and goals. The Democrats say the administration must explain how it will pay for the base, expected to cost around $200 billion over 20 years, without raiding other missions such as unmanned probes and studies of the Earth. What supporters and opponents of a moon base fear most is a repeat of the International Space Station, widely considered one of NASA's worst failures. That facility has not delivered on promised research benefits and brought few inspir-

"The big thing is, we don't want this to be another space station," said Clive Neal, an expert in lunar geology at the University of Notre Dame and chair of NASA's Lunar Exploration Analysis Group.

The scientific goals that the space agency cited when unveiling its moon-base plans last month included the possibility of building optical telescopes that would benefit from the moon's lack of a blurring atmosphere. "The general feeling was that we're doing so well now in space that there's no real reason to go back to the moon for astronomy," said Paul Lowman, a geologist at

Yet Lowman, who began work on plans for a moon base during the Apollo program heyday of the 1960s, said the moon may be suited for specific astronomical tasks. The moon's far side, which always faces away from Earth, has less radio noise than anywhere else in the solar system, making it a plausible site for radio telescopes. Lowman also sees potential for arrays of refrigerator-sized telescopes that could be linked to create high-resolution images.

Some boosters of the new moon missions argue that helium-3, an isotope rare on Earth but common on the moon's surface, could be used to fuel nuclear fusion reactors on Earth. But no one knows if reactors based on helium-3 would be technically or economically

Even if the moon were made for astronomy, many experts of solid gold, it's doubtful that exporting lunar resources to Earth would be profitable. Manned mis-

In Bush's 2004 speech outlining his exploration proposal, he described the moon as "a launching point for missions beyond." But most experts say physically launching Mars missions from the moon would require an industrial aerospace infrastructure on the moon that would take decades or even centuries to develop.

'Sometime in (the) next 100 years we may have the construction base on the moon to do this, but in the near term it makes no sense," said Lawrence Krauss, a physicist at Case Western Reserve

Laurie Leshin, director of sciences and exploration at NASA's Goddard center, said the agency is casting a wide net for scientific proposals on how to use a moon base. The early goals Leshin highlighted are modest, including searching for ice deposits at the lunar poles, studying impact craters and taking core samples that could shed light on patterns of solar activity over billions of

"Science is one of the great things we can do (on the moon), but it's not the only reason we're going or frankly even the primary motivator," Leshin said.

It is a peculiar fact of the cur-University who supports building a rent moon project that the effort comes after Bush's decision that the moon would be NASA's next destination. But some scientists say that's appropriate, because pure research has always piggybacked on the broader political reasons for sending people to

"No one would argue that (a lunar outpost) is worth the cost if it's just about the science," said Krauss of Case Western.

Astronomer Neil deGrasse Tyson, who serves on NASA's external advisory council, took Krauss' point a step further.

"If you only considered science, there's hardly ever any reason to send people into space," said Tyson, director of the Hayden Planetarium at the American human presence on the moon over to create a scientific rationale Museum of Natural History in

Football gears up for fall 2007 season

By MARCUS MURPHREE Sports Editor

A month after their 37-7 victory over the Northern Illinois Huskies in the San Diego County Credit Union Poinsettia Bowl, head coach Gary Patterson said he and his Horned Frogs are beginning to work towards the 2007 season.

Offseason training begins today with spring practices set to commence in March, Patterson said.

The Frogs finished the 2006-2007 campaign with a top 25 ranking for the third time in four years, but Patterson said the ranking may not be indicative of who will pen their name with TCU

EEP COMPASS

Diverse group comprises diving Frogs

By MARCUS MURPHREE Sports Editor

After the ripples in the pool smooth over and the swimmers retreat to the locker room, four athletes enter the Rec Center Gymnasium and begin their training.

Following a brief adjustment of the gears on the 3-meter springboard, sophomore diver R.J. Hesselberg silently poses on the end of the turquoise board. A small hop, followed by a skyward leap, and suddenly the 20- opportunity to get scholyear-old is flying through arships and it worked out the air in a series of acrobatic twists and flips.

Hesselberg, along with sophomores Claudia Combs and Hannah Hale and freshman Jennifer Ferguson, makes up the TCU diving team.

In her first year of collegiate diving, Ferguson has continued making her mark as a leader and competitor, diving coach Wayne Chester said.

"I was a gold medalist at the Pan-American Juniors in Mexico City in 2001," Ferguson said.

Hesselberg brings the most part of the team," Chesexperience to the team with ter said. "Jennifer is a leader in 10 years of competitive diving under his belt

"I saw people diving during swimming lessons, and I realized I hated swimming, so I started diving," Hesselberg said.

Both Ferguson and Hesselberg were international recruits to the TCU squad from Canada. Hesselberg is from Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, while Ferguson is from Montreal, Quebec.

"They were given the real well," Chester said.

Former TCU divers from the Houston area helped draw Combs to the university.

"I knew Chad Hummel and Kelly Seely, and I used to be on a dive club with them back home," Combs said.

The H20 Frogs diving team joins the San Diego State Aztecs as the only two conference teams to have no upperclassmen on their roster, accord-
