ROGERS RIDES STREET SWEEPER

Mayor Unperturbed by Ouster Clamor

By HAL RORKE

To the complete confusion of all opposition, Mayor Will Rogers of Beverly Hills yesterday morning delighted a crowd of several hundred constituents, theatergoers and photographers by playing with the municipal equipment, reviewing the police and fire departments and by extemporaneous epigrams. The panorama camera was the only thing that got past him.

In an interview exclusive to the Illustrated Daily News, Mayor Rogers expressed confidence that he would survive any attempt to oust him. "If they do, I guess I'll have to go to work," he admitted.

Disaffected members of the board of trustees, however, were notably absent at the ceremonies. Mayor Rogers was unalarmed, but silent. After climbing down from the new street sweeper, which he says, picks up all Beverly Hills dirt—almost all, he confessed to hecklers that he had neglected to summon members of the board, and suggested that this fact might account for the pleasant day.

Any action that is taken must be instituted before Wednesday, if Rogers' attackers are to have the satisfaction of hearing his retorts, for he leaves then on a new speaking tour.

The mayor errant verified reports that he had recommended traveling for all city executives as a means of keeping politics free from trouble. In reply to Rob Wagner, strong Rogers supporter, who asked what Mayor Rogers would do if politics were free from trouble, he exclaimed:

"Huh, that's local. The higher these national politicians go, the funnier they get!"

Although he applauded agitation to supplant all ordinary, noisy dogs with the new English barkless variety, a move said to be directed at S. M. Spalding, chairman of the board of trustees and leader of the anti-Rogers coterie, the meandering mayor discouraged proposals to make exclusive Beverly Hills a walled city.
