

American Embassy,
London, England,
April 19, 1943.

Dear Mr. Carter:

Following up my letter, the Ambassador told me that if he received any news of your son, or if he could get it, he would immediately send you a despatch.

I am enclosing a clipping from the evening paper and we are so happy, as I know you must be, to realize that your boy is safe.

I hope one of these days he will be restored to you or, better still, that an exchange will permit him to get back into action, which I know must be closest to his heart's desire, as well as to yours.

With all good wishes,

Sincerely,

Harold R Stark
