

Will Rogers Mixes Siberia, Europe and World Series

BY MARY WYNN.

Backing away in schoolboy embarrassment, Will Rogers of wise-crack fame and the cow puncher drawl, protested yesterday: "I don't want no interview—I thought this gal was tryin' to get in the movies."

That "movie" angle was somewhat of a handicap, but we caught him by the coattails to find out that he'll start a new picture on the 14th, he's mighty happy to get back home, Russia's still kickin' along and he was stopping here for a few hours en route from his home State of Oklahoma to his adopted state, California.

His foot propped on the running board of a car and a brown hat slouched over his eyes, Rogers stood in a parking station and worked himself up over the fifth game in the World Series. When the score was 3-1 in favor of the Detroit

Tigers, he grinned: "Tain't in the Cards."

But half an hour later he decided to see the game in Detroit today, did an about-face in his plans and, after keeping his broadcasting engagement last night, left to spend the rest of the night in a plane, Detroit-bound.

The humorist went to Dallas soon after yesterday's game ended, to inaugurate his Fall series of broadcasts over the Columbia network. He worked last night in the studios of Station KRLD. In the program he was interviewed by Harold Hough, the Hired Hand of Station WBAP.

He liked crossing Siberia better than any part of his recent trip to Europe—eight days on one train was kinda monotonous, but there's a certain romance about snowy Siberia in his eyes. May be some things he dislikes about Europe, but he ain't a-sayin'—"It's their country, let 'em run it."

Rogers' next picture will be "The County Chairman," a famous old play with a smatterin' of politics. Wait, he's got us droppin' gs.

His daughter, Mary, is in New York studying for the stage and Will Jr. is back in Leland Stanford University.

"Does it give you any particular pleasure, Mr. Rogers, that the Legion of Decency always holds up your pictures as shining examples of what this country needs most of?"

He grinned that million dollar grin. "Don't know whether the country needs more of 'em or not, but they got me goin' out there to Hollywood to make more." Serious for a moment, though he admitted it was "gratifyin'."

Did he ever expect to make one that might not meet with the censors' approval? "Waal, I might."

He was back at the running board listening to the ball game. Later he went to the Fort Worth Club, as the guest of Amon G. Carter to prepare last night's broadcast.

Don't get impatient, We're coming to it now. He was not chewing gum.

RADICALS LOSE

"Tain't in the Cards," Will Rogers sighed yesterday when the radio told him that Orsatti batted for Fullis and forced Collins at second in the fifth game of the World Series, ending the St. Louis Cardinal's chances for victory in the game. The famous wisecracker and ex-cowboy stopped here for a few hours, as guest of Amon G. Carter, en route from his home State of Oklahoma.
