

Stars We All Applaud

Lawrence Tibbett

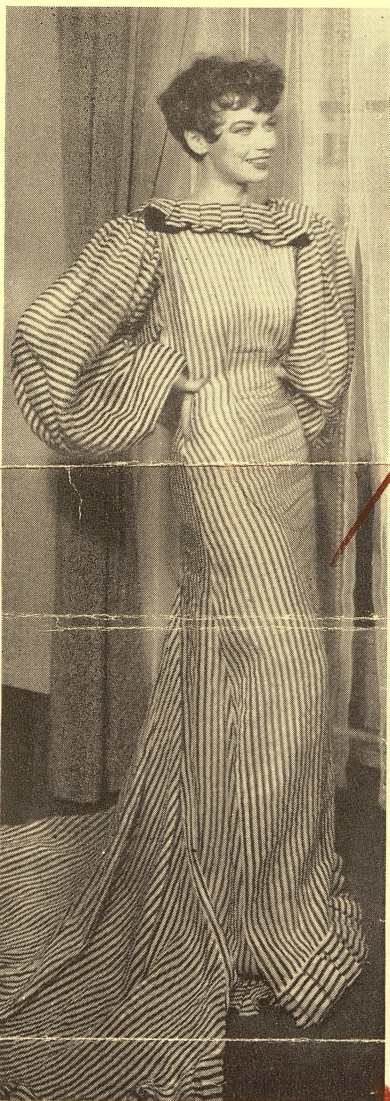

Joe E. Brown

THE NATION LAUGHED at Joe E. Brown in that uproarious baseball film, "Elmer the Great." It was Joe's turn to laugh this time, and he found plenty of amusement in the World Series. He was one of many celebrities who made the Book-Cadillac their headquarters while in Detroit.

CREATOR of Mr. Florian Slappey and many another mirth provoking fiction character, Octavus Roy Cohen is one writer who gets real enjoyment out of his daily work. He stopped at the Netherland Plaza in Cincinnati recently, on his way to New York.

STAR of opera, screen and radio, Lawrence Tibbett opened the winter concert series at Dayton's Memorial Hall. He was a guest at the Van Cleve.

Gladys Parker

Octavus Roy Cohen

DRAWING the "Flapper Fanny" cartoon series is only one of the creative activities of Gladys Parker, who never runs out of ideas. She's well known as a fashion designer, too. The creation she's wearing is supposed to be a beer dress, and she calls it "Suds." She wore it at a party given in her honor at the Lexington.

THE NATION LISTENED IN as "The Hired Hand" (with the alarm clock) interviewed Will Rogers on a recent Sunday evening broadcast from the studios of KRLD, the Dallas Times-Herald radio station, in the Hotel Adolphus. In this picture are (l. to r.) Amon G. Carter, publisher of the Fort Worth Star-Telegram; Tom Gooch, editor of the Dallas Times-Herald; "The Hired Hand," well known Fort Worth radio announcer; Will, and Edwin J. Kiest, publisher of the Times-Herald.