Mr. Amon G. Carter,
Fort Worth, Texas.

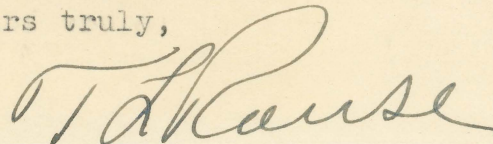

My dear Sir:

Will Rogers is dead. There never will be another like him, but some imitator will have to try to fill his place. I want to try and want to make you a sporting proposition.

Far be it from me to claim to have any of the humor or ability possessed by Mr. Rogers but I would like to take a shot, if you will give me the opportunity. If it clicks its the Star-Telegram's. If it don't go over it hasn't cost you a thin dime. Would like to send in some dope each night for a trial.

Am enclosing some of my stuff. Realize that with your paper some of the ideas would have to be tamed down. The average reader likes a little take-off each day as a tonic with their reading. Just the little common place things said in a different way.

Yours truly,

T L Rouse

Looks like the Democratic end of our Congress put a fast one over on the Republicans the other day on this tax question. The Democrats were offering amendments taking everything but the mortgage on the radio, car or refrigerator from the folks. The Republicans were just throwing fits all over the place and howling their heads off. For fear some of them would have strokes, the Democratic boys finally said, "April fool," and settled back down and laughed until their sides hurt while the Republicans wrote back home how they had saved the little man from extinction. Boys will be boys and a little horseplay is good for anybody—even a Republican.

We haven't been able to figure out this gin fiht. The farmers, most of them, are for the Triple A. We have never yet figured out where the big boys come in unless it is the bookkeeping that it requires. The guy who pays all this processing tax is not the manufacturer—it's us and you. We pay and don't know it, and it didn't hurt a bit. You know four-bit bacon tastes lots better than 10c bacon, even if it comes off the same hog and out of the same side of the same hog.

Vernon, Texas, Aug. 17.--The world was stunned at the death of its friend Will Rogers. His kindly humor and philosophy was know wherever folks could read. And aviation lost a good flier ~~and~~ in Wiley Post and its greatest booster went down with him. But its the pioneering spirit of fellows like them that makes life worth living. Just to have known men like them two is worth a whole lot.

This won't stop the ~~and~~ advance of aviation. If the train wrecks in the early days of railroading had of counted we would still be riding in wagons and buggies. We suspect that if Rogers and Post could have chosen their means of transportation to the last round-up--they would have picked the airplane.
