

WILL ROGERS

SAID

(A Daily and Sunday Feature by That Famous Philosopher Made Up of the Best of His Published and Unpublished Notes and Letters to His Family).

I have read all Presidential speeches on both sides up to now, and the winner is the man smart enough to not make any more. There is a great chance for a "silent" third party.

Every town should have some kind of yearly celebration. (I am writing like Brisbane.) Dident Rome have its annual bathing festival? Dident Cairo hold some kind of female Rodeo?

So think up something for your town to celebrate. Have a parade. Americans like to parade. We are a parading nation.

Any person that don't read at least one well-written country newspaper is not truly informed.

Up here at the ranch the other day a negro private of the famous Tenth Cavalry was leading a tired horse around that had lost in his particular competition. He didnt know anyone was in hearing distance, but we heard him say: "Never mind, Old Boy, you didnt win nothing but I loves you."

Now let some educated diplomat think of a more fitting thing to say to our foreign and native competitors than that!

The only thing you can do with a picture after you have finished it is to run it and then take out every third reel. That will do more to satisfy an audience than anything I know of.

"I consider the appointment an honor," he said. "I am more than willing to do anything I can for the greatest man who ever lived in this world.

"I used to know him when he was a real cowhand. I was with him most every day while I was at the World's Fair in St. Louis. He was with Mulhall's Wild West show and was the greatest one in the show.

"We must put this over big."

then, have much to spend, although he has spent millions since.

The writer advised him, "Since you plan to make a food out of corn, why not offer $1,000 for the biggest ear of corn grown in the United States? That would attract attention, without much cost, and advertising means to attract attention."

Mr. Kellogg did that and other things, more intelligent.

Now he does the most intelligent thing of all, raising the wages of his workers by 12.5 per cent and making the 36-hour week permanent. Nothing is wiser than intelligent liberality.

Monday this and other countries will celebrate Armistice Day. On Thursday Josef Stalin, standing beside Lenin's mausoleum in Kremlin Square, reviewed the Red army celebrating the eighteenth anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Two million Russians witnessed the military spectacle, which included 420 war "tanks" with fighting machines able to travel on the water, climb up on land, continuing on their way, and "land battleships" mounting three heavy guns each with numerous machine guns, and a crew of eight machines never before exhibited.

After that came a great street ball in Sverdloff Square, with jazz bands, suggesting "capitalism." Perhaps Russia is getting ready to enjoy herself in bourgeois fashion.

An elderly doctor in England confesses to Lord Rothermere's London Daily Mail that he killed five of his patients, hopelessly ill, put them out of their misery and is willing to be tried for the "mercy killings."

To four men he gave poison at their request. The fifth, an imbecile infant, born without a cranium, was strangled by the doctor.

The "mercy" doctor says, "If I permitted a dog to suffer, as these patients were suffering, I should be prosecuted for causing unnecessary cruelty, not putting it out of misery."

British medical men, under the leadership of one of the most distinguished surgeons in England, demand a law to put those hopelessly ill and suffering out of their misery, legally, with the approval of a medical commission and presumably the sufferer himself.

Such a law might discourage the constant striving of science to conquer disease, which would be a pity.

The usual United States news outside of politics runs as follows, quoting headlines:

"A gang of machine gunners hold up an Erie train, take $46,450 from
