

Looking Back Over 60 Years With Franklin D. Roosevelt

President Roosevelt will be 60 years old on Jan. 30, and the Nation will celebrate his Diamond Jubilee birthday as the climax of the infantile paralysis campaign. These pictures show some of the highlights of his life.

An interesting portrait taken nearly a half century ago showing young Franklin standing behind his father, James Roosevelt, and his mother, Sara (Delano) Roosevelt. His mother lived to see her son inaugurated three times as the President of the United States.

In the Gay Nineties, Roosevelt went to the Groton School at Groton, Mass. It was quite a thing to wear turtle-neck sweaters, and young Roosevelt played on the Groton football team. He is between the two boys on the front row.

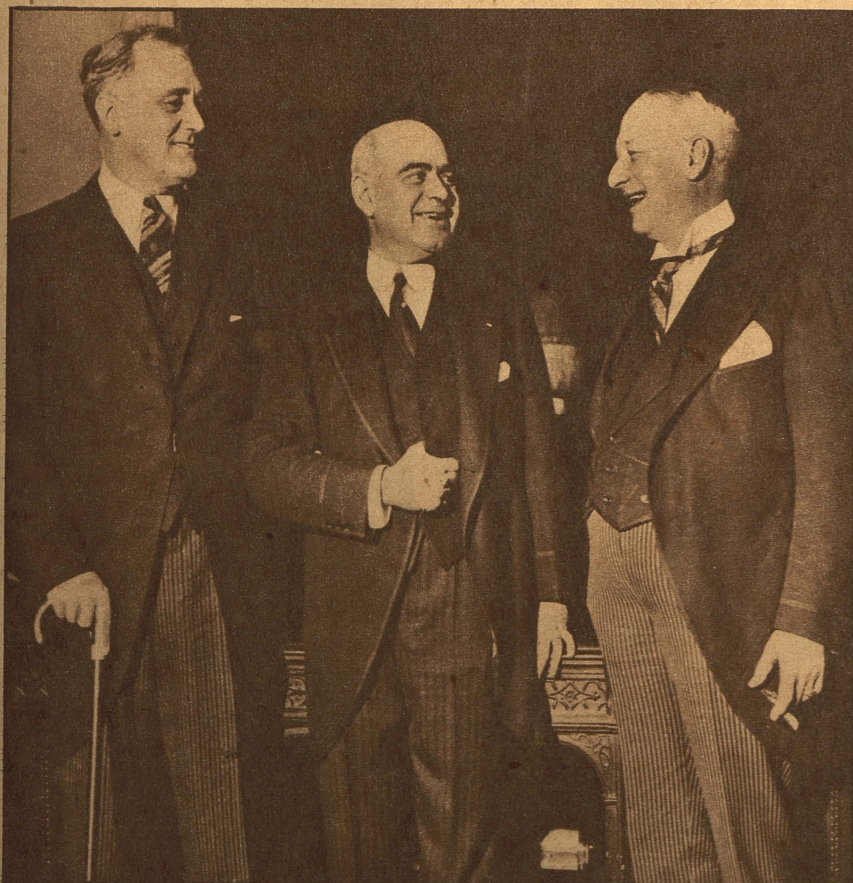

Back in 1917, Roosevelt prepared to go to war. During his spare time he practiced on the rifle range at Indian Head, Maryland. He is shown here with the late Franklin K. Lane (left), then Secretary of Interior. Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy.

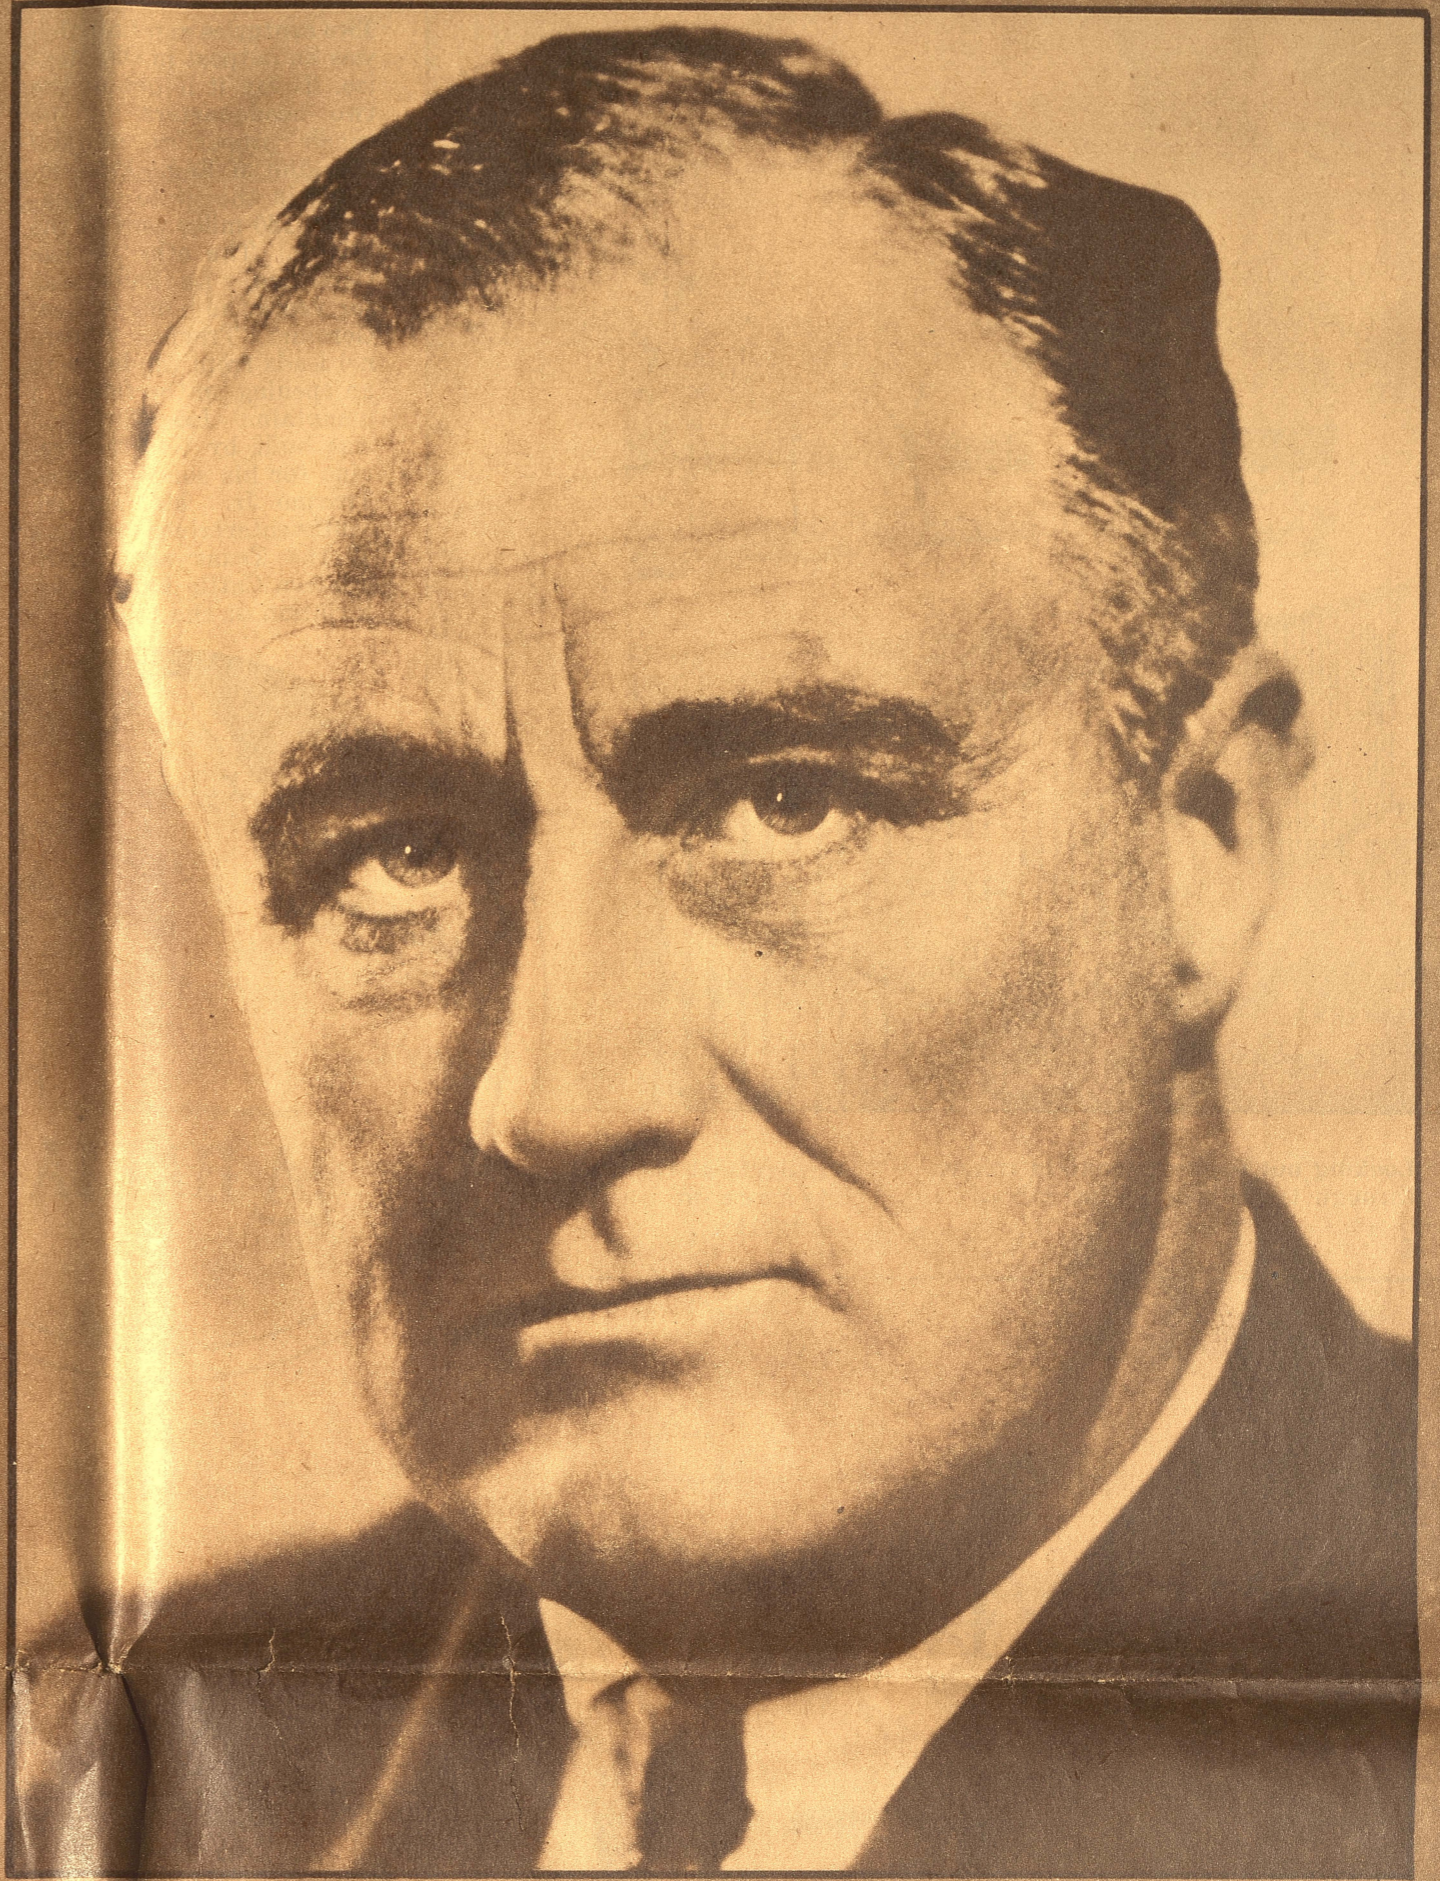

Under war's strain, Roosevelt is shown at his desk in the Navy Department in Washington in August, 1918, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy during World War I.

Making his fighting speech as he accepted the Democratic nomination for the presidency in Chicago in 1932.

As President-elect Roosevelt (Jan. 2, 1932) went back to the executive mansion in Albany, N. Y., to congratulate Governor Lehman (center) who succeeded him as Governor of New York. Former Governor Al Smith is shown at the right.

A recent picture of Roosevelt as the war President shows a grim and determined leader of a united people.

Close to the President's heart is the health of the boys and girls of America. For nine years the President has authorized the use of his birthday to raise funds to fight infantile paralysis. Roosevelt is shown here as he received an audit and report of the last campaign which broke all records and raised a net total of $2,104,460.53. At left is Keith Morgan, national chairman of the committee for the celebration of the President's birthday. At extreme right is Basil O'Connor, president of the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis.