Fort Worth, Texas,
April 9, 1941.

Mrs. Morris Sheppard,
1814 Nineteenth Street, N. W.,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Mrs. Sheppard: Mere words at a time like this are at best inadequate vehicles for the expression of one's real feelings but I wish you and the members of your family to know that in your hour of sorrow you have my heartfelt sympathy. The blow that has taken from the family circle a loving husband and father has cost the State and the Nation one of its ablest, hardest working and most valuable counsellors and at a time when his services are most needed. Thousands who were privileged to know him as I was have lost a true friend. He was a true Christian, a sweet, beautiful character. His long and notable public career ever was marked by strict adherence to his high sense of justice and the principles for which he stood. You and the members of your family and his friends know that the world has been bettered by his having lived and the service he gave to it.
