Airways Heads Eat Quick Breakfast Between Planes

Here is something new for the air traveler. Three officials of the American Airways, arriving at 6:30 o'clock Monday morning after a night flight from San Diego, didn't have time, between planes, to come to town for breakfast. Instead they breakfasted at the municipal airport, on a bridge table set up on the hangar apron. A hot breakfast was supplied by the Fort Worth Club. Left to right are C. R. Smith, vice president of the airways;

AIRWAY HEADS ARE BREAKFAST GUESTS HERE

Three officials of American Airways—LaMotte T. Cohu, president; Col. Eddie Rickenbacker and C. R. Smith, vice presidents—who Wednesday night went to the Pacific Coast on the inaugural night flight of the line, came back to Fort Worth Monday.

In the absence of cafe arrangements, which will follow with the American Airways improvements at the airport, they breakfasted on a bridge table, set up on the apron of a hangar. Hot food, prepared at the Fort Worth Club, was taken to the airport and served under the supervision of Manager Tom Carvey of the club.

Leaving San Diego by plane at 4:40 p. m. Sunday, the officials arrived in Fort Worth at 6:30 o'clock Monday morning, left at 7:25 a. m., and will reach Cincinnati at 5:46 o'clock tonight and Washington at 7:40 a. m. Tuesday.

The party was met at the field by Dr. Hodges McKnight, medical examiner for the Southern Division of American Airways, and Amon G. Carter.
