

TCU students, faculty, staff, alumni and retirees are invited to join the Race & Reconciliation Initiative at its second virtual town hall, which will be held from 3:30-4:30 p.m. on Thursday, September 24.

Registration Link: https://tcu.zoom.us/webinar/register/WN\_U\_mqYMBROqQz7UYLJHfRQ

Acting on the charge of Chancellor Boschini and the Board of Trustees to study racism, slavery, and the Confederacy, the Race & Reconciliation Initiative aims to provide critical perspective, advance deeper understanding, and make recommendations for action and healing. In conducting their research, the team will be seeking answers that are documentable, measurable, and verifiable.

The September town hall, "Standing on the Shoulders Of..." will provide an opportunity for the TCU community to learn about recent efforts to recognize TCU's diverse history and contend with the legacies of racism through the TCU portrait project, the establishment of TCU's Native American monument, memorializing the lynching of Fred Rouse, and the annual observances of missing and murdered indigenous women.

Panelists include Jacque Lambiase, professor and chair of Strategic Communications; Scott Langston, instructor of Religion and Native American Nations and Communities Liaison; Adam McKinney, assistant professor of Dance and President of Tarrant County Coalition for Peace and Justice; and Santiago Piñon, associate professor of Religion and director of Latinx Studies.