GRANT WILL ASSIST TWO PROJECTS

A grant of $2.4 million from the Brown-Lupton Foundation will assist in funding two new facilities on campus. The gift was announced recently by Bronson C. Davis, vice chancellor for University advancement.

Of the total amount, $400,000 is designated for the new weight training and rehabilitation center for which ground was broken during Jan. 15 ceremonies.

The remaining $2 million will be applied to funding needs for a new performing arts center to be located south of Ed Landreth Hall. Preliminary plans call for the building to include a medium-size recital hall, rehearsal space for choral and instrumental ensembles, individual music practice rooms and an experimental theater and its support space.

Earlier grants from the T.J. Brown and C.A. Lupton Foundation have been used for renovation of the Brown-Lupton Student Center, expansion as well as an endowment for the Mary Couets Burnett Library and construction of the Charles Tandy Hall.

TCU GUILD TO PRESENT "COMPANY"

When "Company" — a musical examination of the joys and pain of marriage and bachelorhood in New York City — opened in that city's Alvin Theater in April 1970, most critics had high praise for Stephen Sondheim's musical and lyrical effort. Martin Gottfried of Women's Wear Daily described it as "thrilling and chilling, glittering bright ... and filled with brilliant music." John O'Connor of The Wall Street Journal called it "brassy, brittle, sympathetic, cynical, romantic, calculating and alive."

Director Steven Breese hopes that those praises come to mind when the TCU Guild presents its version of "Company" Feb. 24-27 in Ed Landreth Auditorium. "Stephen Sondheim never wrote a more pertinent, classier or more sophisticated score of lyrics and music," Steven said of the musical. "And it holds up beautifully more than 20 years after it was written. It's just as accessible in 1994 as it was back then."

An actor as well as a director, Steven was part of a summer stock group presenting "Company" in the Midwest some 15 years ago. The current production is his second directing effort since he joined the TCU faculty last fall and directed Thornton Wilder's "The Skin of Our Teeth" in September and October. Before his appointment here, he spent more than a year in Germany with the touring company of "Cats."

Based on a book by George Furth, "Company" centers around 30-something bachelor Robert and his married friends' attempts to convince him to get married despite the glaring problems in their own relationships. TCU students will provide the acting talent.

In fact, "Company" will involve faculty members and students from several of the departments of the College of Fine Arts and Communication. Music faculty member Richard Estes will provide musical direction, and Kurt Sprenger, also of the music faculty, will conduct the orchestra. Local actor/dancer/choreographer Linda Leonard will be the choreographer; faculty member LaLonnie Lehman, the costume designer; and new theatre faculty member Michael Skinner, the lighting designer.

The stunning set, designed by theatre faculty member Nancy McCauley, includes a working elevator and a rear-projection screen that illuminates a New York skyline which changes with the hour and year of the scene.

"Company" is part of a tradition at TCU, said Dean Bob Garwell. "For more than 30 years, the College of Fine Arts and Communication has joined forces with the TCU Guild in presenting an annual spring scholarship benefit. This year's TCU Guild production of "Company" continues that long-standing and equally rewarding tradition. We are indebted to the guild for providing a yearly scholarship to each of the eight departments in the college. Hats off to the TCU Guild!"

Performances of "Company" are at 8 p.m. Feb. 24-26 and at 2 p.m. on Feb. 27. Tickets are $10 for general admission, $6 for students. Reservations can be made at Ext. 7626.

DEDICATION EVENT SET FOR STUDENTS

Robert Carr Chapel will be the setting Saturday evening for a dedication ceremony for Harris College of Nursing students who have completed their first semester of clinical courses. To be followed by a reception, the annual event is hosted by the Nursing Student Association for the students as well as their family members and guests. The dedication will honor approximately 40 students, said Marinda Allender, adviser to the sponsoring group.

Speaker for the occasion will be Anita Willis, a registered nurse who earned the B.S.N. degree through Harris College. A unit leader of the gynecology/oncology unit at Fort Worth's Harris Methodist Hospital, she was presented the 1993 "nurse of the year" award by TCU's Beta Alpha chapter of Sigma Theta Tau, the international nursing honor society.

Dating back to the early 19th Century and Florence Nightingale, who is credited with reorganizing nurse training programs and reforming hospital conditions and procedures, the sophomore dedication "is one of the most significant ceremonies in any nursing program," said Harris College Dean Pat Scarse.

PIONEER IN FLEXIBLE GLASS TO LECTURE

A physical chemist whose pioneering research resulted in flexible glass will lecture on campus Thursday and Friday. Dr. J.D. Mackenzie, professor and associate dean of engineering and applied science at the University of California — Los Angeles, is among several distinguished scholars and specialists scheduled to visit during the current academic year as Cecil H. and Ida Green Honors Professors. Hosted by the physics department, Mackenzie also will meet with faculty members and students during his two-day stay.

"Recent Advances in the Science of Sol-Gel Derived Materials," his free public lecture, will begin at 7 p.m. in Sid Richardson Lecture Hall 1. Faculty and staff members and students are welcome to attend his second talk, scheduled for 2 p.m. Friday in Sid Richardson 357.

Mackenzie is in the vanguard of research specialists working with crystalline and non-crystalline solid materials and in developing hybrid materials for refining semiconductors, among other applications. During the past decade, they have devised a new method of making glass from liquids. Whereas glass produced from sand contains impurities, silica glass is very pure and allows greater control in experiments and applications.

Their preparation approach, known as the sol-gel method, requires only room-temperature settings and provides an alternative to older methods that involved heating substances to high but below-melting point temperatures and applying pressure.

A special porous glass created by Mackenzie's TCU colleague T.W. Zerda of physics captures semiconductor clusters in the pores, offering one way of resolving the problem of achieving uniformity of size and shape. Jeffrey Coffey of chemistry has worked with T.W. on semiconductor applications. For the last two or three years, scientists have been refining a process for trapping enzymes and proteins in glass — creating organic/inorganic "hybrids," according to T.W. Other applications include determining the content of liquids, such as iron in water.

Mackenzie earned his Ph.D. from Imperial College in London in 1954 and conducted postdoctoral research as a fellow at Princeton and Cambridge universities. Prior to joining the UCLA faculty in 1969, he worked at the General Electric Research Laboratory in Schenectady, N.Y., and taught at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute. Editor and co-editor of eight books and author of 13 U.S. patents, he also is represented in more than 300 scientific journal articles. He has been honored by the Swedish government and Royal Academy and by Japan's Association for Ceramic Science. In 1969 the Societe de Hautes Temperatures et Refractaires of France selected him as a medalist for outstanding work in the field of high temperatures.

ASH WEDNESDAY SERVICE PLANNED

Four Brite Divinity School students will conduct a service at noon Wednesday — Ash Wednesday — in Robert Carr Chapel. Greg Lanier, Judith Lott, Melissa Martin and Michael Richter will lead participants in what fellow Brite student Terry Inman, a University Ministries intern, described as "a service of repentance and rededication, a responding in confession and hope." Undergraduates Christi Gifford, Jennifer Hill, Sarah Hughes and Zephirin Ryan, members of a University Ministries worship task force, planned the service. Faculty and staff members, students and the public may attend.

LATIN AMERICAN CONFERENCE SCHEDULED

Faculty members and graduate students from the University will be contributing to the content of as well as hosting the 42nd annual meeting of the Rocky Mountain Council for Latin American Studies. The conference will be held Wednesday through Sunday at the Worthington Hotel.

Bill Beezley of history chaired the council's programming committee and will serve as chairman and commentator for sessions on "Political Rituals and Popular Culture" Thursday and "Books, Beats and a Blaze: Illuminating Popular Culture" Saturday.

During Thursday's session on "Ancient and New Images in Chicano/Mexican/Mayan Cultures," Mercedes Olivera of journalism will discuss "Hispanic Feminism: From Pre-Hispanic Mesoamerica to Modern Mexico" and Don Frischmann of modern languages and literatures will present his paper on "New Mayan Theatre in Chiapas: From Folktales to Social Drama." Don's wife, María Teresa Marrero of Tarrant County Junior College's modern languages faculty, will present "Public Art and the Politics of Site: The Case of Los Angeles Chicano Artist Daniel Martínez." Don also will chair a literature session on Thursday, working with TCU colleague Carolyn Durham, commentator.

History graduate students Matthew Esposito and Wendy Waters will present papers during a Friday session dealing with "Mexican Pallbearers, Pulquerías and Forging the Patria." In his paper, Matthew will discuss "Heroes Laid to Rest, the Past Exhumed: State Funerals in Porfirian Mexico," and Wendy will examine "New Roads, Old Directions: Calles' Caminos and the Creation of a Capitalist Culture." Jackie Stroud, also a graduate student in history, will chair and critique the session "Religion in South America" Friday. Ph.D. graduate Jeff Pilcher, now at the University of North Carolina — Charlotte, will serve as chairman and commentator for a Friday session on "The Politics of Governance."

Don Coerver of history will serve as commentator for the Thursday session on "Aspects of the Mexican Revolution." On Saturday Arturo Flores of modern languages and literatures will chair another literature session.

Other features of the conference include a curriculum resource workshop, "Teaching About Latin America," scheduled for Friday, as well as two triumphs of creative programming: a session involving five Latin American scholars who share the first name, "Desperately Seeking Susan: A Roundtable," and an essay competition, "What is the socioeconomic significance of the different hats worn by Mexican revolutionaries?"

In addition to TCU and the council, Sponsors include Holt, Rinehart, and Winston, Inc., the University of New Mexico, El Camino Real Project Inc., and Tulane University's curriculum resource center.

Faculty and staff members as well as students are invited to attend the free dinner at 5:30 p.m. Discussion will begin at 6 p.m.

Uniting Campus Ministries, the sponsoring organization, selected the topic as its spring "Ecumenical Exchange" program.

NEELEY SCHOOL SEEKING REACCREDITATION

The Neeley School is among 24 business schools from across the United States seeking accreditation under new guidelines of the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

A five-member team composed of business school deans and an accounting administrator will visit TCU Thursday through Friday, according to Karen Martinez, director of accreditation projects for AACSB.

Martinez noted that the two dozen U.S. business schools are seeking initial accreditation or reaccreditation. Half of the group, including TCU, also are seeking separate accreditation of their accounting departments.

Under previous AACSB guidelines, determination of whether a program was accredited focused on "inputs and resource standards," said Neeley School Dean Kirk Downey. Number of library books, student credit hours per faculty member and quantity of faculty members with Ph.D. degrees were key measures, Kirk explained.

"There was one way to accomplish the standards, and everyone did their program the same way," he said.

The new guidelines recognize that different business schools serve different types of students and that the missions of those programs should address the unique needs, Downey said. Another key change under the new accreditation standards is a change of emphasis from inputs to a directive to identify program effectiveness. "That is to say, what kind of graduates are you producing and what kind of research is getting done?" he added.

The accounting department is seeking accreditation for the first time, said Chairman Bob Vigeland. "It has become symbolic of a quality program," he noted.

This week's visit by the AACSB delegation culminates more than a year of self-study in the business school, Kirk said. The group will conduct an on-site follow-up to a written accreditation report produced by the Neeley School.

The team is expected to unofficially disclose its decision to the school before leaving campus and make a written report within 10 days, Martinez said. TCU may respond to the report. Following the response, the report will be forwarded to the AACSB's Business Accreditation Committee, which either will approve or deny the recommendation for accreditation. Final accreditation approval will be voted on by the 19-member AACSB board of directors. The board is expected to rule on the Neeley School request in April, Martinez said.

SERVICE HELD FOR SCHUR

Funeral services were held Feb. 6 at Temple Beth-El for Rabbi Robert Schur, a local religious and civic leader who died Feb. 3. He had been a resident of Fort Worth since 1956, when he assumed leadership of Temple Beth-El.

Frequently a part-time member of the religion department faculty before he resigned his ministerial role after the onset of Alzheimer's disease, he helped in forming the Fort Worth Community Council and the Child Study Center. In 1971 he was one of the chairmen for TCU/Fort Worth Week. He was dean and a life member of the National Federation of Temple Youth and active in the Jewish Federation of Fort Worth, Jewish Social Service Agency and National Conference of Christians and Jews. He received awards from numerous organizations.

Survivors include his wife, a daughter and a son.

CHANGES DUE FOR LICENSE STICKERS

Since Jan. 1, 1994, the State of Texas has required that license renewal stickers be placed inside a vehicle's left front windshield. Because of this requirement, TCU parking permit stickers will have to be removed from that area so that the license renewal can be applied.

When license plates are renewed, the TCU permit will need to be scraped off and taken to the campus police office for a free replacement sticker.

FEB. 26 IS PROFESSORS NIGHT OUT

Thanks to TCU's chapter of Alpha Phi Omega, a national service fraternity, Feb. 26 will be Professors Night Out. Faculty and staff members are included in the organization's plans for an evening of free baby-sitting in the Rickel Building from 6 to 11 p.m.

The second such "night out" program for children ages 3 to 12 will include snacks and games, movies, sports and other activities according to Katie Thorp, who heads Alpha Psi Omega.

Feb. 21 is the deadline for the free service's reservations, which can be made by calling Katie at 924-8728. NOTES ON FOLKS

TCU Press director Judy Alter will autograph copies of her new novel, Libbie, tomorrow (Wednesday) at 7:30 p.m. at Border's Books & Music, 4713 S. Hulen. Published by Bantam, the historical novel is based on the life of Elizabeth Bacon Custer, wife of Gen. George Armstrong Custer.

Graduate student Charlene Blair (mass communication) presented a paper titled "Television Violence: Parables for a Modern Age" at the Feb. 3-5 joint meeting of the Southwest/Texas Popular Culture and American Culture associations held in Waco.

Lessons from the Locker Room: The Myth of School Sport, due for March release, is the work of Andy Miracle (Tandy Scholar Program/sociology) and former faculty member Roger Rees. The cover is a photo by Luther Smith (art). The book uses a number of examples of high school sport familiar to many Texans, from Vernon to Daingerfield to Ross Perot and no pass/no play. In the volume, Andy and Roger, now at Adelphi University, "argue that our current sports obsession is on a collision course with the the needs of society heading toward the 21st Century"... and "that in the global marketplace, the American educational system needs to compete on more than just the playing field." While on sabbatical, Andy is working on another sport book titled The Anthropology of Sport: An Holistic Assessment.

A research study titled "Strategy Instruction in a Literature-Based Reading Program" by Cathy Block (education) was published in the latest edition of The Elementary School Journal.

An article "Government Accommodation of Religious-Based Conscientious Objection" by Ron Flowers (religion) was published in the winter 1993 issue of the Seton Hall Law Review. It examines the government's willingness to accommodate the conscientious objections of religious people on matters such as military service, sanctuary for aliens, taxes, serving on juries, taking oaths in court, having one's picture on a driver's license and compulsory autopsies by medical examiners.

John Touliatos (educational foundations) recently published Inventory of Marriage and Family Literature. He also presented "A Sixty-year History of Family Measurement" at the annual conference of the National Council on Family Relations in Baltimore.

Sympathy is extended to Donna Johnson (provost's office) on the death of her father, C.D. McIver, in Lubbock Feb. 9. He was a resident of Hobbs, N. Mex., where services were held Feb. 11.

Curt Wilson (music) recently finished his 10th year as a performer with the Fort Worth Stock Show Rodeo Band. Curt said he has played approximately 250 shows with them so far.

Lee Daniel (modern languages and literatures) has been invited to serve as contributing editor for an upcoming issue of Brújula devoted to Chicano theatre. The special number will concentrate on the last five years, with emphasis on activity in Texas and California, where the majority of Chicano teatros are located. Articles devoted to writers in New Mexico, Colorado, Arizona, Illinois, Oregon and Washington also will be included.

Dave Kuhne (Ph.D. student in English) read a paper titled "Literary Allusion and Creative Writing: The Cook's Tale" at a Feb. 5 meeting of the Southwest/Texas Popular Culture Association in Waco.

Sympathy is extended to Judi Wilson (Neeley School) on the death of her husband, Pat, who suffered a heart attack Jan. 28. A memorial fund has been established for Judi and her two daughters at Summit National Bank where contributions can be made to the "Pat Wilson Memorial Fund."

SWIMMERS WIN, LOSE TO RICE

There was good news and bad news at the dual meet for swimmers and divers held earlier this month in Houston. TCU's men's team won 124-78 over the Owls, while the women's team lost 87-118 in a meet "that was closer than the score indicated," according to Coach Richard Sybesma.

Sheila Hewerdine set a new pool record in the 200 butterfly with a time of 2:04.78.

On Feb. 5 the TCU women defeated the University of Houston women 152.5 to 145.5 in another close meet.

"We were a little tired that weekend from all the training and traveling we have done," Richard said. "Our team competed well; we just need to begin our taper and concentration on the little things like starts and turns. I am excited about how we will perform at the Southwest Conference meets with some rest; we should be ready to swim very fast in three weeks."

The next meet for the women is the SWC competition Feb. 24-26, while the men will compete in the SWC meet March 3-5.

BOETTGER IS ALUMNI SPEAKER

"Is the national debt an all-consuming animal or merely an accounting error?" is a question Adjunct Professor Rick Boettger answered when he spoke to alumni and friends Feb. 3 in San Antonio. He will ask that question again when he speaks Feb. 22 for the TCU Dallas Breakfast Series March 3 in Austin.

"The National Debt: Fact or Farce" was Rick's topic for an "Evening with a Professor" in San Antonio and will be for the 7:30 a.m. Dallas event at the Park City Club and the 7 p.m. event at the Austin home of Wayland and Carolyn Clark Oatman. Sponsors are the San Antonio alumni chapter, the TCU Dallas Alumni and the Austin alumni chapter, respectively.

Rick, formerly a full-time member on the Neeley School faculty, is a specialist in international business strategy. He was a Fulbright professor of business administration at the Academy of Foreign Trade in Moscow during the 1992 fall semester.

Five days after Valentine's Day, young psychologists' fancy will turn to "Perceptions of Passion" as Dr. Gordon Karl Hodge, associate professor of psychology at the University of New Mexico, delivers the keynote luncheon address for the Fifth Annual Spring Student Psychology Convention Saturday at noon in the Student Center Woodson Room. A past president of the Southwestern Psychological Association, he will elaborate on the psychological and physiological causes of romantic passion and love.

The University's chapter of Psi Chi, honor society for psychology students, is hosting the regional meeting; Mike Robinson of psychology, Psi Chi adviser, and junior psychology major Julie Bauer have coordinated the programming. Three of Timothy Barth's students — undergraduate Lynley Fowler and graduate students Mike Hoane and Stephen Irish — will present papers Saturday afternoon. Faculty and staff members as well as students and the public may attend the convention, which begins with registration and a reception to be held from 7 to 9 p.m. Friday in Student Center 205. The program continues through 4:30 p.m. Saturday. The registration fee, covering the reception and luncheon, is $12 in advance and $15 at the door. Additional details are available by calling Ext. 6437.
