Hereford, Texas

Dear Mr. Green:

I must confess you are a pretty good meteorite detective, at least in your region, and I take my hat off to you.

I did finally get hold of Mr. H. J. Norwood, who answered from Cuervo, New Mexico. He said he did find a meteorite at about that location, a little larger than a football weighing about 45 pounds, a very old, dark rusty colored one. He does not say it was a stone, but I assume it was. He says that he took the rock with him and finally sold it to Mr. H. H. Nininger of Denver.

I was thrown off the trail because in the last list that Nininger published, nothing is listed under Hereford. I will write him and find out exactly how he lists this meteorite, but I am sure this takes care of this particular one.

It may well be that there are others in the vicinity, so it will not hurt to keep on the general lookout and maybe some of those folks we talked to last fall will still find another one.

With best regards, I am

Yours sincerely,

Oscar E. Monnig
