HIGHER EDUCATION IS FOCUS OF STUDY

Higher education, long a center for research, is itself rapidly becoming the focus of investigation. In the last two years, higher education has been or is being studied in more than half these United States--including Texas.

John Mangieri, dean of the School of Education, and John Arnn, former assistant dean who now is dean of Radford University's College of Education and Human Development, recently analyzed studies of higher education in 15 of the 26 states under investigation--Arkansas, California, Colorado, Florida, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia. Most of the studies were initiated by the governor's office, governing board or an institution itself.

The two deans found great discrepancies among the studies but did pinpoint a set of issues that cropped up frequently: governance, relationship of higher education to the states' economic welfare, efficiency, financial funding and mission and function. Nebraska, California, Kentucky, Michigan and Missouri excel in providing abundant or at least adequate geographical access to higher education. Only Colorado, they found, stressed a need to eliminate program duplication in universities and colleges.

The analysis by Mangieri and Arnn also showed a strong relationship between education and present economic well-being of the states, and, in almost every report, higher education was perceived as a vehicle for future economic development as well.

In 1982 the Carnegie Foundation published an essay predicting, "Public oversight is likely to increase as much of higher education moves from expansion to constraint," and urging that colleges and universities strengthen their capacity to regulate themselves. This study shows the foundation was accurate in forecasting increased regulation beyond campus. In states where no single statewide governing board exists to oversee higher education, establishment of such a board was recommended. Where such boards already are in place, their strengthening was urged.

On an average, each state report contained 36 major recommendations. The issues were those most persons familiar with higher education would expect--remedial/developmental education, tenure, collective bargaining, admissions policies, affirmative action, etc.

CARS WITH FIVE CITATIONS TO BE TOWED

Effective Jan. 1, automobiles which have been charged with five or more citations will be impounded by Campus Police. This is a modification to TCU's campus parking and traffic regulations for 1986-87, which called for impounding cars with 10 or more citations.

The change was studied and placed into effect by the University Traffic Regulation and Appeal Board. Police chief Oscar Stewart said information on personal records may be obtained by calling the Campus Police at Ext. 7930.

CARTOONISTS' VIEW OF TCU ON SALE

The 30" x 40" cartoon of TCU life, drawn by Skiff cartoonists Todd Camp and Saul Torres and donated to the Hunger Week auction, is now available in a limited edition print. The original was purchased for $200 by the University Ministries office. Prints are on sale in the Student Center for $6; $1 from each sale will be donated to Hunger Week, said Todd, a junior majoring in Journalism.

Todd and Saul, a junior commercial art major, began the project intending to finish it in one night; instead, the heavily detailed cartoon took them three weeks to finish. Most of the work was done in the TV room of Tom Brown Hall, where the two are residents. After all their effort, they decided they couldn't part with their creation and so had the prints made.

TCU IN THE NEWS

The exhibition of bronze sculpture by artist HARRY GEFFERT, which closed Nov. 22 at the Fort Worth Gallery, was the subject of a feature that appeared in the Nov. 21 Star-Telegram. The story noted that local art dealer Dutch Phillips calls Harry "one of Fort Worth's great natural resources."

TCU's SCHOOL OF EDUCATION, one of several in the area to be included in a Channel 8 news report Nov. 20 that dealt with student teaching, was praised for its practice of placing all its student teachers in urban Fort Worth schools.

"Crime victims criticize news media for lack of sensitivity" was the Star-Telegram headline for the Nov. 23 story detailing research by journalists GERALD GROTTA and RITA WOLF, which was presented during the evening forum at the recent crime victims and media symposium. The pilot study was funded by the Sunny Von Bulow National Victim Advocacy Center.

The Nov. 21 Star-Telegram op-ed page featured an article by Vice Chancellor PEGGY BARR. Her comments on the recent Carnegie Foundation report noted that a number of institutions, including TCU, already are giving serious attention to the out-of-class life of students.

Stricter loan regulations facing college students was the subject of a Star-Telegram story that quoted financial aid director LEO MUNSON. He expressed the opinion that "families with incomes between $25,000 and $40,000 are going to be affected the most." The story noted that some 100,000 Texas students borrowed a total of $230 million under the Guaranteed Student Loan program last year.

"Secret code guided hobo 'brotherhood'" was the Star-Telegram's headline for the lengthy Nov. 30 feature on artist DAVID CONN and his research on hobo signs. The story was complemented by a photo of David with etchings reproducing the signs as well as a chart of hobo road signs.

International students at TCU were part of a feature story airing on Channel 5 during the Thanksgiving break.

HERB BRUBAKER (financial aid) and STANLEY BLOCK (business) were interviewed by Channel 8 for news stories airing Nov. 25 and 26, respectively. Herb discussed changes in financial aid, while Stan looked at holiday retail sales expectations in the metroplex.

The Star-Telegram asked DAVID CROSS (psychology) why kids are hooked on dinosaurs, and his explanation, included in a story on Dec. 1, was that small children are interested in superlatives--the biggest, meanest, fiercest--and dinosaurs also are mysterious since they're no longer around.

Sociologist ART BERLINER was one of the persons featured Dec. 7 in the Star-Telegram's look back at the bombing of Pearl Harbor in 1941. A chief gunner, he was part of an experimental flight of a B-29 bomber at Alamogordo, NM, that was an attempt to apply an already tested aircraft in a new way...what later would become the dropping of the first atomic bomb from a B-29 named Enola Gay.
