$6 MILLION TANDY GIFT SET FOR PROPOSED CENTER

A multimillion dollar gift from the Anne Burnett and Charles Tandy Foundation will endow the proposed Charles Tandy American Enterprise Center as well as assist in construction of a facility in which the center will be housed on campus.

Announcement of the gift totaling $6 million was made at a Nov. 15 dinner for members of the University's board of trustees and their wives/husbands hosted by Chancellor Bill Tucker. Preceding the annual fall meeting of the University's governing body on campus Nov. 16, the event was at Shady Oaks Country Club. The announcement was made by Fort Worth trustee Dee J. Kelly, chairman of the trustees' development committee.

Of the total gift, $5 million given over a period of years will endow the business research and public outreach programs of the center, which will be a part of the M.J. Neeley School of Business. The remaining $1 million will be applied to construction of a 42,000-square-foot building adjacent to Dan D. Rogers Hall, which houses the Neeley School.

Last spring TCU's trustees approved the renovation of Rogers Hall along with the addition of a connecting structure of equal size. The remodeling and expansion will provide space for new programs in the business curriculum as well as for the Tandy American Enterprise Center. Plans currently being developed by architects were reviewed by board members at last week's meeting.

The proposed center is a major component of a blueprint for the advancement of the Neeley School. Its three primary functions will be to disseminate information about current and emerging business issues and practices, to provide management and executive development programs and to conduct applied research toward improved business practice.

Plans call for the American Enterprise Center to phase in its programs over a multi-year period. In addition to a director, the center will include faculty research associates along with selected undergraduate and graduate students, who will assist the professional staff in conducting research projects.

"The University recognizes that the best way to serve the business community, in addition to preparing outstanding graduates who will take their places in business and industry, is to develop sound, useful research and then to transmit that research into the business world," said Dr. Tucker.

"We are grateful," the chancellor continued, "to the trustees of the Anne Burnett and Charles Tandy Foundation for this magnificent gift which honors one of TCU's most distinguished alumni and enhances the contributions his alma mater can make to the business community of which he was a driving force."

Recently initiated programs which will become a part of the center activities are the American Enterprise Forum, a lecture series that brings nationally recognized authorities to Fort Worth to address contemporary business issues, and the Executive Breakfast Series during which Neeley School faculty members report on results of their research to business executives.

The new Tandy Foundation gift brings to nearly $12 million the endowment commitments for the School of Business in the last four years. Within this period two academic chairs and two professorships have been endowed in addition to significant contributions to scholarship and research funds. TCU's business school is among the 30 percent of business schools throughout the nation that hold accreditation for both undergraduate and graduate programs from the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business. Undergraduate enrollment in the Neeley School, now TCU's second largest school or college, has grown by 18 percent in the last two years to a total of 1,558. During the same period, graduate enrollment has increased by 94 percent to 230, according to Dean Ed Johnson.

TCU HOPES TO SET UP GIFTED/TALENTED NETWORK

The School of Education took the first step toward establishment of an inter-university network for teacher training and research in gifted and talented education last week at the annual convention of the Texas Association for the Gifted and Talented in McAllen.

Under the direction of Cathy Collins, TCU sponsored a colloquium which drew professors who train teachers of gifted/talented students, directors of the Texas Education Agency's Office of Gifted/Talented and officers of the Texas Association for the Gifted and Talented. Tangible projects resulting from the Saturday colloquium include, says Cathy, a document explaining teacher training programs in gifted/talented education in Texas, a brochure of summer institutes for gifted/talented students and those interested in working with them and identification of expertise in the state in the field of gifted/talented education.

It is hoped that such a network would be a means of developing research in the field of gifted/talented education, coordination of the work of teacher training institutes in the field and joint projects with professors, school teachers and administrators.

PUBLIC VICTORY CELEBRATION TO BE NOV. 30

Fans of the Horned Frog team, already assured of its best season since 1958, will have opportunity to celebrate on Nov. 30.

Open to the public, a victory party to take note of the "TCU unbeleevable" season is planned by the TCU Alumni Association. The program will feature Coach Jim Wacker, who has brought the Purple and White to attention as the nation's "Cinderella" team in his second season.

The Central Texas Room of the Amon G. Carter Jr. Exhibit Hall will be the site of the casual event, scheduled to begin with a 7 p.m. reception. A barbeque buffet is set for 7:45 p.m.

Reservations, set at $10 per person, are due by Nov. 28 in the alumni office, Box 32921, Fort Worth 76129.

Heading the committee is Lindy Berry, Fort Worth businessman whose records as a TCU all-American quarterback still stand in the University's athletic history books. Other members are alumni Mick Ashworth, Steve Christie, Jerry Kimmel, Tennessee Neal, Susan Nix, Tom Rogers and Carolyn Weaver, all of Fort Worth, along with Glenn Whittington of Hurst.

TRUSTEES HEAR OF ENDOWMENT, ATHLETICS

On campus Friday for their annual fall board meeting, TCU's trustees heard additional details of the Anne Burnett and Charles Tandy Foundation's $6 million gift and the broad-based results of current national attention to Frog football from Chancellor Bill Tucker.

The Tandy Foundation gift includes $5 million to endow the Charles Tandy American Enterprise Center and $1 million to help expand quarters for the Neeley School of Business. In their business session, trustees approved a major effort to raise more funds so that the Neeley School building could be doubled in size, according to the preliminary plans for 42,000 additional square feet. First estimates are that $8 million will be needed. Construction will begin as soon as plans are complete and funds are in hand.

In discussing the rapid rise of TCU's football fortunes, Dr. Tucker said that he expects the high visibility across the nation to bring a surge in inquiries from prospective students. Even so, he said, the University's goal continues to be a stable enrollment over the next decade. Last fall's entering freshman class fits that long-range aim, he said. Not only was it slightly larger than the 1100 goal, but also its average SAT score was up 24 points. And this came despite the fact that a growing proportion of TCU's freshmen are from Texas, where average SAT scores are about 50 points below the national average. The winning football program can be an "extraordinary asset," the chancellor said, "provided it is marked with unquestioned integrity and seen within the context of the academy. Far more is at stake than boosting morale on campus and in the community. It is widely recognized that intercollegiate football today needs good models. . . What a golden opportunity for TCU to have seized the initiative and set the pace!"

Dr. Tucker repeated to the trustees the prediction he made to faculty and students at the opening fall convocation, when he said TCU's turnaround in football "will have national significance far beyond scoreboards and turnstiles and bumper stickers, for we will have proven beyond question that success and integrity can fit together. And we will have set an example for coaches and players and universities and fans across the land."

At a different time in Friday's meeting, trustees endorsed "the concept of constructing a new residence hall or new wing to Milton Daniel Hall for student athletes," a recommendation that came from both the building and grounds committee and the executive committee. They instructed the chancellor to bring about initial architectural and funding plans which will then be considered by the two trustee committees before a decision is made.

While discussing the University's aim for a stable enrollment, the chancellor pointed out that the number of college-bound students in the country continues to fall and that a growing number of out-of-state colleges and universities see fertile ground for recruitment in Texas, where the young population is climbing.

Thus, even with TCU's current momentum, Dr. Tucker said, "slippage is clearly a possibility unless we choose to broaden our programmatic base so as to attract an additional segment of the market."

One such "broadening"--the addition of a program in engineering--was suggested for consideration last spring by the 1990s Commission, a group of community leaders who were asked to assess TCU and its role. A faculty committee has completed a feasibility study of such a program, the chancellor said, and he reviewed its pros and cons but was careful to hint of no recommendation at this time.

In other matters a review of the audit showed that TCU lived within its $60 million budget. The year's biggest financial change may have been in the growth of the book value of the endowment, which grew 24 percent to reach $131.4 million by May 31. This amount is more than double the University's $60.1 million endowment of five years earlier, trustees were told. Support from alumni and friends was also strong during the year. Gifts to TCU amounted to a total of $11,052,995--the third highest total in TCU's history. The facts, said Dr. Tucker, "give credibility to the claim that at this time TCU is on the threshold of a new level of distinction."

A British studies program linking TCU with the University of Kent at Canterbury will be sponsored July 8-Aug. 9 by the Department of Political Science and the Division of Continuing Education.

Subjects for the five-week summer term will be The Romantic Vision; Wordsworth and Coleridge, taught by Bob Frye of English; England 1815-1901, Politics, Prudery, the Pax Britannia, taught by Kathryn McDorman of history; and Politics in the United Kingdom, taught by Don Jackson of political science. All three courses satisfy relevant core group requirements. Classes are set Tuesdays through Fridays to allow three-day field trips or individual sightseeing.

HOLIDAY SCHOLARSHIP TRADITION CONTINUES

A tradition of contributing to a TCU Scholarship Fund during the holiday season instead of sending Christmas cards to on-campus friends was established in 1972 by Dean Libby Proffer and others. This practice enables both faculty and staff members to accomplish two goals--sending holiday greetings to TCU friends and helping deserving students through the scholarship program.

During this season of giving, what better way to convey our warm wishes than to contribute generously to a fund which "keeps on giving" in terms of influence on peoples' lives for generations to come," says scholarship/financial aid director Leo Munson. "It is also an economical way in comparison to today's costs of cards and postage."

Last year a total of $322.50 was contributed. The fund now totals $4,947.50 as of Jan. 4, 1984, and a successful year for 1984 will make it possible to award the first scholarship from this fund for the 1985-86 academic year.

Contributions may be made to the Financial Aid Office, Sadler Hall Room 108, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday or may be mailed to Box 30787.

The donor should indicate his/her wishes as to how the name should appear on the card to be displayed in the Faculty Center. If the donor wishes the contribution to go to a specific scholarship fund, this should also be designated.
