

▽ YESTERDAY ▽

T

● ● Robert Brown, a Fort Worth, Texas, civil engineer, was in Muskogee yesterday.

There's nothing unusual about Muskogee playing host to a Fort Worth resident. But Robert Brown is different. And he's different because he has a hobby that few men, very few men, follow.

He spends his spare time hunting METEORITES.

A meteorite, in case you don't know it, is a fragment of a meteor. Brown was in Muskogee "on the trail" of a meteor that fell in eastern Oklahoma near Sallisaw, June 8, 1920. He knows it fell then because local papers carried quite a story at the time and because he has found several people already who remember having seen it. But what he wants to know is exactly WHERE it snakes are going toward the rivers for lack of water elsewhere. The largest one reported had seven buttons.