Dear Mr. Carter,

I did not have an opportunity to express to you during your recent brief visit the thought that we all have here which is that you will receive encouraging news from Amon, Jr. The percentage is certainly in favor of Amon's being missing in action and a prisoner of war which, while unpleasant enough, still indicates a very good chance of his eventually returning home safely.

It seems that these things happen to only the best of the country's young men, the reason being that only the best volunteer for the service in which Amon, Jr. is engaged. You have something to be extremely proud of in his service, and even though your burden of worry is great you can have a small degree of consolation that the job he is doing is being well done and to the very best of his ability.

Kindest regards,
