

Oscar Monnig wishes to repeat a request he made at a meeting several months ago.

He is embarrassed in not being able to return to a lady at Comanche a large specimen of impure hematite she thought was a meteorite. He recalls letting some one have it to make a cut to show the interior, but can not recall who this was.

The rock was handed to some one in a group of several who were in the hall of the Fort Worth Children's Museum one day about a year and a half ago. I do not mean to imply that the Museum has it. I have asked both Mr. Casstevens and Mr. Rigney about it, but they do not recall it.

If you encounter any one who may have this irregular dark reddishbrown rock of some 15 pounds or so, please phone him at their store or at his home

The piece is intrinsically worthless but the finder wants it returned.9