TAKE TIME

We get up in the mornings by the sound of alarm clocks or nagging roommates to face days filled with full class schedules and meetings. We face deadlines which must be met if we ever want to graduate and face a world whose pace gets hotter and heavier every day. All this sends us scurrying about our campus from room to class, class to library, and library back to room, like ants busily storing food in preparation for a winter storm. We may even bump into someone on our way to some of these important appointments, but do we ever see that person's face? Do we ever acknowledge the presence of others around us? In our rush to make our lives worthwhile, are we in effect becoming zombies? Let us all take more time to be friendly and notice the world and the people around us. Friendliness is a virtue to be cultivated, and one that we must all work into our busy schedules. After all, what is life, unless we have friends to share it with?
