Dear Friend:

A travelling salesman caught two boys fighting.

Endeavoring to part them he enquired, "What you fighting about?"

1st. boy-- He called me a liar.

Salesman. Well, does that make you a liar? Settle down, he calling you a liar you see does not make you one.

1st. boy. decides that's a top notch idea.

Salesman; rather enjoyed the scrap so continues

Say if he had not called you a liar that is no reason why you are not one, is it?

Result;; Scrap begin over again.

Just a suggestion about this Dallas-Ft. Worth Squabble.

As it now stands the crux of the matter evolves the making or losing of spondulix. That should not be while our boys are fighting for peace.

As I read, times- equipment-all things pertaining to our existance will undergo a drastic change after the war.

Why not in some way cling to the present sight for the air-port. let Dallas use have her way, then when the war is over ~~using~~ all of the new inventions to erect, maintain and establish an air-port on your location equal to none in the nation? Build for the future not for the uncertain present.
